Kiōshi in the Harvard-Yenching Library: A Guided Tour

© Adam L. Kern, Harvard University*

Scholarship on the woodblock-printed comic-book known as the “yellowback” (kiōshi 黄衣紙) received a hefty boost recently with the completion in 2004 of Tanahashi Masahiro’s Kiōshi Overview (Kiōshi sōran), a massive work in five volumes spanning some 3,500 pages and providing précis for virtually all 2,500 or so extant kiōshi.1

This is an ironically substantial monument for a genre that was relatively ephemeral, having been produced and primarily consumed from 1775 to about 1806, confined in its readership mostly to the denizens of Edo (present-day Tokyo), and above all else irrepressibly lighthearted. Yet as an urbane comicbook for adults that both was arguably one of the most popular genres of its day and also remains a valuable repository of cultural history illustrated, the kiōshi perhaps merits such weighty treatment.

* The author wishes to express his gratitude to: his graduate research assistant, Mr. Will Fleming, for his hard legwork on this project; the Reischauer Institute of Japanese Studies, for its generous financial support; Mr. James Cheng, Director of the Harvard-Yenching Library, for the courtesy of the images appearing herein; and the two anonymous readers for their perceptive editorial suggestions. The author further thanks the several people who granted physical access to the kiōshi mentioned in this article: Ms. Kuniko Yamada McVey and Mr. Xiaohua Ma of the Harvard-Yenching Library; Ms. Anne Rose Kitagawa of Harvard University’s Arthur M. Sackler Museum; and Ms. Rachel Saunders of the Sackler Museum of Art and the largest library in Japan, after all, a comprehensive survey in non-Japanese collections should probably be undertaken, eventually. Here, however, I take a more modest and decidedly local first step by providing a kind of “guided tour” of kiōshi in the Rare Book room at the Harvard-Yenching Library, most of which have never before been transcribed into modern Japanese, let alone translated into or even discussed in English. Two other affiliated collections—one at Harvard’s Arthur M. Sackler Museum of Art and the largest one at Museum of Fine Arts, Boston—shall be left for future surveys.

The Kiōshi

The Harvard-Yenching Library can boast a small but captivating collection of kiōshi. Produced by the most popular literary and artistic lights of the day—and merely one of many genres of “playful literature” known as gesaku 戏作—the typical kiōshi was mass produced in one to three volumes, with black-and-white interior pictures dressed up by occasionally colorful frontispieces affixed to soft yellowish covers. Although long ignored as a kind of pulp fiction, interest in the kiōshi has been growing over the past few decades in the West as well as in Japan, no doubt as part of both the “Edo boom” and the realization that the kiōshi might be a distant progenitor of the multibillion-dollar a year industry that is the modern manga.2

1 Tanahashi Masahiro, Kiōshi sōran, in Nihon shoshigaku taikei, vol. 48, nos. 1-5 (Seishōdō shoten, 1986–2004). The first three volumes contain publishing information and précis; the fourth, several indices; and the fifth, mostly reproductions (mostly in black and white) of cover art.

2 The kiōshi is also compelling unto itself, of course, as an expression of the rich visual-verbal, comic, and popular imaginations of the Edo-period Japanese. For more on this in English, see Adam L. Kern, Manga from the Floating World: Comicbook Culture and the Kiōshi of Edo Japan, in Harvard East Asia Monographs, no. 279 (Cambridge, M.A.: Harvard University Asia Center, 2006).
Sixteen kibyōshi are listed in the catalogue Early Japanese Books at Harvard-Yenching Library. Of these, at least one is of questionable attribution: the copy of Santō Kyōden’s 山東京傳 (1761-1816) Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōtō hitsu zen’aku nikki 「両頭筆善悪日記」, 1799) appears not to be an original Edo-period kibyōshi. Although its panels of printed text and pictures are the right size, the physical pages are much larger than the usual 5 x 7 inch mid-sized (chābon 中本) format invariably observed by the genre, and its paper and ink are uncannily pristine. This particular work may well be a facsimile reproduction, then, or at least a reprinting from a later age—perhaps the Meiji period (1868-1912)—but it is most likely not a “genuine” kibyōshi.

Conversely, it might be argued that there are actually more kibyōshi in the collection than the catalogue has hitherto acknowledged, for several works categorized as “bluebooks” should more aptly be considered kibyōshi. This is because the bluebook (aohon 青本) was a loosely defined comicbook genre that actually includes both kibyōshi as well as earlier works for children—or at least for semiliterate readers.

To expand upon this slightly, during the late eighteenth century the line between genres was typically amorphous. Works could be categorized—and often were categorized—in more than one way. It is oftentimes exceedingly difficult to determine a genre, then, only by the color of its cover. Not all books with blue covers are generically bluebooks; nor are all books with yellow covers generically yellowbooks, since the covers of some generic bluebooks faded to yellow. (In this sense, the term kibyōshi actually refers more to comicbooks with “yellowed” covers than with “yellow” covers.) This is why most specialists today, like Tanahashi, differentiate between the genres of bluebook and yellowbook less by cover color—especially since many covers have gone missing (as is the case with a few of the works in the Harvard-Yenching collection)—but more by the presumed readership based on the general level of the content of the story and the complexity of its visual-verbal idiom. Simply put, books with either blue or yellowed covers for children tend to be bluebooks, and books with either blue or yellowed covers for adults tend to be kibyōshi.

One example of a kibyōshi that the catalogue miscategorizes as a bluebook is Kyōden’s Master Flashgold’s Abiding Dream (Kingin sensei zōka no yume 「金々先生造化夢」, 1794)(Fig 1). The adult content of the story alone no doubt qualifies this piece as a kibyōshi. In fact, this is the consensus among leading specialists: Tanahashi lists Master Flashgold’s Abiding Dream in Kibyōshi Overview; and Mizuno Minoru includes it in one of the five volumes devoted to the kibyōshi within Santō Kyōden’s Collected Works (Santō Kyōden zenshū). Thus, Master Flashgold’s Abiding Dream should probably be recategorized as a kibyōshi.

---

4 The titles of kibyōshi are challenging to render in English because they often contain complex forms of wordplay that typically become clear only with a close reading of the work, something that is particularly difficult when the work has never before been annotated or transcribed into modern Japanese. Even Japanese scholars find kibyōshi titles daunting, which is probably why Tanahashi himself as a rule refrains from explaining titles in Kibyōshi Overview.

---

Similarly, of the 34 bluebooks and blackbooks (kurohon or kurobon 黒本) in the catalogue—the two related genres are lumped together into the same category—a dozen or so are treated as kibyōshi by Tanahashi in Kibyōshi Overview. These works are:

1. The Life of Kusunoki Masashige (Kusunoki ichidaiki 「楠一代記」, 1794). Written by Santō Kyōden 山東京傳. Harvard-Yenching Library catalogue #324

2. Ōtsu’s Specialty Products (Ōtsu no meibutsu 「大津名物」, 1781). Written by Iba Kashō 伊庭可笑 and illustrated by Kitao Masanobu 北尾政演. HYL #332

3. Trilateral Intrigue of the Soga Brothers (Sanbukutsui murasaki Soga 「三幅対紫羅我」, 1778). Illustrated and presumably written by Koikawa Harumachi 恋川春. HYL #333

4. The Invisible City Revisited (Shin kakurezato 「鉢金久連里」, 1788). Illustrated by Torii Kiyoshige 鳥居清重. HYL #335

5. The Young Prince’s Bow-Pulling Feat (Yōkun yunzei no isaoshi 「幼君弓勢綴」, date unknown). Anonymous. HYL #338

6. The Kurama Goblin Vendetta (Katakiuchi Kurama tengu 「敵討鞍天狗」, 1779). Written by Bunkidō 文溪堂 and illustrated by Torii Kiyotsune 鳥居清経. HYL #339

7. Master Flashgold’s Abiding Dream (Kingin sensei zōka no yume 「金先生造化夢」, 1794). Written by Santō Kyōden 山東京傳 and published by Tsutaya Jūzaburō 萩屋重三郎. HYL #340

8. Début of the Black-Capped Golden Carp (Hatsuyaku kogane no eboshi wo 「初役金烏帽子魚」, 1794). Written by Santō Kyōden 山東京傳 and illustrated by Jippensha Ikku 十返舎一九. HYL #341

9. The Flowery Tale of Masters Gold and Silver (Natori no kiku kōhaku chōja 「名取菊黃白長者」, 1779). Written and illustrated by Santō Kyōden 山東京傳. HYL #342

10. The Salutary Story of a Soul Restored (Enju hangontan 「延寿反魂談」, 1789). Written and illustrated by Santō Kyōden 山東京傳. HYL #343

11. Nonomiya’s Proverbially Profitable Gambol (Katowaza Nonomiya mōde 「譚野々宮儲」, 1784). Illustrated and presumably written by Kitao Masayoshi 北尾政義. HYL #344

12. A Mother and Daughter Laid to Rest, Part One: A Tale of Winter Snow ((Oyakozuka zenpen Tōsetsu monogatari 「養子塚冬雪物語」, 1804). Written by Nansenshō Somaihito 南仙笑楚満人 and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni 歌川豊国. HYL #345

13. A Mother and Daughter Laid to Rest, Part Two: A Tale of Spring Snow ((Oyakozuka kōhen Shunsetsu monogatari 「養子塚春雪物語」, 1804). Written by Nansenshō Somaihito 南仙笑楚満人 and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni 歌川豊国. HYL #346

Although Tanahashi considers all 13 of these to be kibyōshi, one might take issue with him on as many as 3 works: (1) The Life of Kusunoki Masashige (Kusunoki ichidaiki), on the grounds that it exceeds by 20 pages the usual 30-page length of the longest kibyōshi; (4) The Invisible City Revisited (Shin kakurezato), since its story hardly rises above a relatively straightforward updating, in an overly simplistic visual-verbal idiom, of the children’s story about the split-tongue sparrow; and (8) Début of the Black-Capped Golden Carp (Hatsuyaku kogane no eboshi wo), since it is really only lightly illustrated, with long extended passages of text without any pictures at all, and therefore as something other than a comicbook per se, cannot be a kibyōshi by definition.

Thus, setting aside for now the caveat that not everything in Tanahashi’s Kibyōshi Overview is indisputably a kibyōshi, in a liberal reinterpretation, subtracting 1 title for the facsimile version of Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice, but moving 10 titles from the category of bluebook to that of kibyōshi, the Harvard-Yenching

---

7 Tanahashi lists the illustrator for this and the next piece as Toyohiro 豊広. Tanahashi, Kibyōshi sōran 3 (Seishōdō shoten, 1991), p. 237.
Library might be said to have a revised total of about 25 kibyōshi in its collection. This number is larger than the 16 works previously thus classified. Still, this is not a great number, to be sure. It is merely a small percentage of the approximately 3,387 titles—accounting for 13,828 books and manuscripts—in the Harvard-Yenching’s rare book collection. True, this number represents a significant portion of the mid-Edo genres of playful literature in the collection, to wit: 13 fashionbooks (sharebon 洒落本), including Santō Kyōden’s masterwork (The Stylishly Slangy) Latticed Bordello ((Tsūgen) Sōmagaki 「嬉遊縛筒」, 1787); 5 “sentiment books” (ninjōbon 人情本), including some by leading ninjōbon author Tamenaga Shunsui 猪名委時水 (1790-1843); 7 “multivolume comicbooks” (gōkan 合巻), such as Revenge of the Two Butterflies (Katakiuchi futatsu chōchō 「敵討双蝶々」, 1807); 2 jokebooks (hanashibon 談本); and 34 titles cataloged as blackbooks and / or bluebooks, but 24 if going by the adjusted numbers. This means that, by my reckoning, the 25 kibyōshi in the collection account for one third of the 76 works of Edo gesaku. Even so, this is only a fraction of the collection’s Edo-period works at large, including novellas of the floating world (ukiyozōshi 浮世草子), reading books (yomihon 読本), broad sheets (jitsuroku 実録), funnybooks (kokkeibon 滑稽本), and so forth.

And it is certainly not a great number by the standards of kibyōshi collections in Japan. The Tokyo Metropolitan Central Library (Tōkyō chūō toshokan 東京中央図書館) in Hibiya houses approximately 1,300 kibyōshi in its Kaga Collection (Kaga bunko 加賀文庫) alone—not counting the kibyōshi in its Special Acquisitions Collection (Tokubetsu kaiage bunko 特別買上文庫) and Tokyo Collection (Tōkyō shiryō 東京資料). The National Diet Library and the Toyo Bunko (Tōyō bunko 東洋文庫) have approximately 1,000 kibyōshi each. The kibyōshi in several university libraries, like the Ebara Taizo Collection (Ebara Taizō korekushon 須原退蔵コレクション) at the University of Kyoto, or the collection at Waseda University, can be counted in the hundreds. Even the Matsuura Historical Museum (Matsuura shiryō hakubutsukan 松浦史料博物館) in Hirado—one of the most far-flung places from Edo on the three major islands of Japan at the time—has approximately 340 kibyōshi, which is over tenfold larger than the Harvard-Yenching’s batch. Granted, the daimyo Matsuura Seizan 松浦静山 (1760-1841) must have collected these during his mandatory attendance in the shogun’s capital. Yet his collection is testament to how popular the kibyōshi was and how much larger even Japanese collections distant from Edo remain today.

Nor is the Harvard-Yenching kibyōshi collection the largest by the reduced standards outside Japan, for that matter. The British Library in London has approximately 100 titles, though some of these may well be duplicates or reprints; the Art Institute of Chicago seems to have as many as 72 kibyōshi; the University of California at Berkeley lists about 40 in its catalogue; the University of London’s School of Oriental and African Studies, only 13; Mount Holyoke College houses about 10 works in its Special Collection; and the C. V. Starr Library at Columbia University, which can boast an otherwise first-class collection, regrettably has only a single catalogued kibyōshi. Of course, these numbers might be low, if the Harvard-Yenching collection is any indication, since it is possible that some kibyōshi in these collections may also have been misclassified as bluebooks.

Nevertheless, when considering the kibyōshi in the Harvard-Yenching Library along with the score of kibyōshi in the Arthur M. Sackler Museum, and the 150-200 kibyōshi in the archives of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston—many of which have yet to be catalogued—then the grand total of kibyōshi in the extended Harvard-affiliated network is undoubtedly one of the greatest, if not the greatest, in the Western world. It may even add up to be among the top 25 collections anywhere, including Japan.

---

8 My thanks to Ms. Janice Katz of the Art Institute of Chicago for this number.
10 My thanks to Professor Timon Screech of the School of Oriental and African Art for this number.
11 My thanks to the Japanese Studies Librarian at the Starr Library, Ms. Sachie Noguchi, for this number. Ms. Noguchi also informs me that although Professor Okuda Isao of Seishin University is in the process of cataloguing hitherto uncatalogued works in the Starr’s rare book collection, no kibyōshi have yet been unearthed.
12 My thanks to Ms. Rachel Saunders of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston for this information.
Brahmin Benefactors

Just why Boston houses such a formidable collection should not be too hard to divine. Boston was, during the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries, at the direct epicenter of a seismological flow of Japanese art—lowbrow as well as highbrow—toward the Western world at a time when the Japanese themselves were largely dismissive of what was then considered to be lowbrow forms like the woodblock print (ukiyo-e) and its sisters, particularly printed chapbooks (kusazōshi 草双紙) like the redbook (akabon or akahon 赤本), blackbook, bluebook, yellowbook, and multivolume comicbook.13

Be that as it may, one may well wonder how and why the Harvard-Yenching Library came to possess any kibyōshi at all when the Museum of Fine Arts was seemingly absorbing almost anything Japanese? Although there is no definitive answer, it is possible that some of the Bostonians who collected Japanese art decided, for one reason or another, to direct a fraction of their bounty toward Harvard’s Sackler Museum and / or Yenching Library. The kibyōshi was such a bestselling genre in its day that anyone collecting popular literature and art in Japan even a century or so after the genre’s heyday could not but have ended up with some titles in the pot, however cognizant he may or may not have been of the nature and value of the kibyōshi in the first place. Perhaps some kibyōshi were simply acquired as an example of Japanese children’s picture books, for although possessed of adult content, to the untrained eye, most works in the genre appear decidedly juvenile.

One might also speculate that the majority of the open-minded and deep-pocketed Bostonians who built the Japanese collection in the MFA must have had close ties with Harvard, since it is hard to imagine prominent figures in Boston who did not. As it turns out, the facts would seem to support this conjecture. For instance, one of the foremost contributors of the Japanese art to the MFA, Ernest Francisco Fenollosa (1853-1908), although famously associated with Tokyo Imperial University (now the University of Tokyo) as an instructor of Philosophy, was graduated from Harvard College in 1874. That same year, Dr. William Sturgis Bigelow (1850-1926), another of the principal contributors, had obtained his M.D. from Harvard before traipsing off to Europe to study bacteriology under Louis Pasteur and then onto Japan, where he became friends with the likes of Fenollosa and Okakura Tenshin (a.k.a. Okakura Kakuzo 1863-1913). Dr. Charles Goddard Weld (1857-1911), who generously underwrote much of Fenollosa’s collecting, came from a family with Harvard connections spanning four centuries, including one recent governor. And the painter Denman Waldo Ross (1853-1935), who bestowed many artworks upon the MFA, taught at Harvard. To make a long story short, of the major collectors and donors of Japanese art to the MFA, all but Tenshin and the famous Orientalist Edward S. Morse (1838-1925) were Harvard men. It is therefore not inconceivable that one or more of these local scions, in addition to building arguably the largest collection of kibyōshi (not to mention Japanese art) in the Western world, also donated a few to the college.

In the case of the bluebooks and blackbooks that might be reclassified as kibyōshi, most of these were purchased in 1954 through a vendor by the name of J. K. Morse (whose connection to Edward Morse, if any, is unclear). At least that is the name that has been stamped onto most of the works in question. A handful of others bear the red seal of one Horikoshi Yoshihiro 堀越文庫. Although no accurate records have been kept, it appears that Horikoshi donated a large sum of books—over 10,000 titles (including many first editions of Japanese, Manchurian, and Western literary works)—to Harvard, apparently through a certain Dr. Cleaves. After being graduated from Tokyo Imperial University with a degree in Japanese literature, Horikoshi became a principal of a Japanese middle school in Tienjin 天津 in then-occupied Manchuria. When the war ended, he was repatriated (only to die the following year, as it turns out), though prior to that he was unable to ship his private library back to Japan. Thus, he leapt at the offer of two Harvard graduates—one being noted historian Donald Shively (class of 1944)—to arrange for his collection to be donated to their alma mater, which it was in 1946.14

Skewed, Eaten, and Doodled

However one explains the existence or reckons the number of kibyōshi at the Harvard-Yenching

---

13 For a detailed discussion of these genres, see Kern, Manga from the Floating World.

The collection strikes one, upon initial glance, as having two primary shortcomings. First, the works catalogued as kiyōshi are skewed toward the later periods of the genre’s history; only 2 of the 16 come from the so-called “Golden Age” of the genre that was the mid 1780s. These 2 are: Beyond the Pale-ings of the Billion Worlds (Daisen sekai お大千世界, 1784), by Tōrai San'ya 唐来幸和 (discussed more fully below); and Otohime, Princess of the Sea (Kore otohime 「是男度比女」, ca. 1784), by one Kenkō 嫵好.\(^{16}\)

Kenkō’s piece, it is worth mentioning, performs an “intertwining” (naimaze 結い交ぜ)—and serves as a “latter day” (gonichibanashi 後日話)—updating—of the legends of Urashima Tarō 浦島太郎 and Momotarō 桃太郎. This it does by marrying the descendents of these two characters, the wealthy Tarōhachi 太郎八 and the maiden Otohime おとめ [sic], to each other. The story goes on to describe how Tarōhachi squanders his money in the pleasure quarters and is about to elope with a courtesan when he suddenly wakes up from what has all along been a dream. Although this ending would have been familiar to readers from the very first kiyōshi—Koikawa Harumachi’s Master Flashgold’s Splendiferous Dream (Kinkin sensei eiga no yume 「金々先生帝国華夢」, 1775) had a similar dénouement—by now the gimmick must have seemed particularly passé as well as contrived. No wonder critics have generally dismissed this piece as lacking the comic “zing” of comparable stories.

Of the 14 remaining catalogued pieces, 8 date from the 1790s and 6 date from the early years of the nineteenth century. There are no pieces from the 1770s, however, meaning that the collection fails to provide so much as a fleeting glimpse of the kiyōshi in its vibrant early years. This lack of balance can be considered one of the major weaknesses of the collection. Even counting the 10 bluebooks in the catalogue as kiyōshi, the lopsidedness evens out only slightly; for of these, 3 were published in the 1770s, 2 were published in each subsequent decade, and 1 is of unknown date of issuance. In short, the Harvard-Yenching collection is skewed toward the post-Kansei Reform kiyōshi that have not been hailed as the finest exemplars of the genre.

The second drawback of the collection is that not one of its catalogued entries bears its original woodblock-printed pasted-on frontispieces (hari edaisen 貼り絵題簽). Although one would not expect to find frontispieces gracing the few works that have been remounted, either as a kind of personal collectanea (gōseibon 合成本) or as a preservation measure in a later age, since remounting often entails discarding the original covers, it is nonetheless disheartening that all of the original works are shorn of their cover art. Moreover, this absence is disturbing, since it means that someone must have ripped off the colored and flashy frontispieces from the covers, perhaps to frame or to sell on the open art market, thereby desecrating these rare works of popular art.

One of the bluebooks that may be a kiyōshi, however, bears the frontispiece to its first volume. This is Iba Kashō’s Ōtsu’s Specialty Products (Ōtsu no meibutsu 「大津名物」, 1781), which was illustrated by Kitao Masanobu (Fig. 2). Interestingly, the very next year, Masanobu—a.k.a. Santō Kyōden—would go on to publish his début kiyōshi, Those Familiar Bestsellers (Gozonji no shōbaimono 「御存知商売物」, 1782). Those Familiar Bestsellers contains a scene in which the personified character Ōtsu Print 大津繪 (Ōtsue from Ōtsu’s Specialty Products—visible in the “dream bubble” of the frontispiece here, above the lantern—plays a prominent role. In fact, both stories open with scenes in which the figures depicted within pillar prints (hashira 柱絵) in the background leap out of their artistic confines, literally, to “come to life” self-reflexively as personified characters within the stories themselves. Thus, in writing Those Familiar Bestsellers, Kyōden undoubtedly borrowed a few artistic ideas from Ōtsu’s Specialty Products, which he himself had also illustrated, after all.

---

\(^{16}\) A few sources claim that Kore otohime was published in 1783. However, it is mentioned in Edo miyage as having been published in 1784. Furthermore, its cover design is identical to others works issued in 1784 by the work’s publisher Murataya. For a transcribed version of this text, see Mikan Edo Bungaku Kankōkai, Mikan kibyōshisen 1 (Mikan Edo bungaku kankōkai, 1956), pp. 29-39.

---

15 For more on the periodization of the kiyōshi, see Uda Toshihiko, “Kibyōshi no sekai: Hyōgen ga daiichigi no kimyō na bungaku kūkan, " in Yurika, vol. 10, no. 4 (April 1978), pp. 101-107. A slightly modified version of this periodization is followed in Koike Miki, Master Flashgold’s Splendiferous Dream (Kinkin sensei eiga no yume 「金々先生帝国華夢」, 1775). --- sonified characters based on foods popular in Edo. Unfortunately, and rather ironically, the Harvard-Yenching copy is more than a little worm-eaten.\footnote{For a transcribed version, see Hanasaki Kazuo, \textit{Edo arakaruto} (Miki shobo, 1986), pp. 109-134.}

Regrettably, several of the volumes also have been effaced by hand coloring and/or doodling in black ink on some of the blank pages, perhaps by younger readers (particularly in the case of the blue-book, \textit{The Flowery Tale of Masters Gold and Silver, Natori no kiku kohaku chôja} 『名取菊白長者』). In \textit{Mongaku’s Subscription List} (\textit{Mongaku kanjincho} 「文覚記進帳」, 1793, written by Nansenshô Somahito 南仙笑楚滿人 and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni 歌川豊国), one reader has made a sketch, inside the front cover, of one of the characters on the very first page of the story (\textit{Fig 3}). This sketch may have been made circa 1815, since a handwritten note on the back cover, in what appears to be the same ink as the sketch, bears the corresponding year (Bunka 12 文化十二年). This sketch could only have defiled the pristine condition of this particular \textit{kibyôshi}. However, it both adds to our knowledge of the life of works in the genre as material objects, and provides an example of how one reader seems to have been inspired to try her or his own hand at comicbook illustrating—perhaps not unlike some \textit{manga} fans today.

Most of the \textit{kibyôshi} in the Harvard-Yenching collection are in relatively good shape otherwise, with foxing, dampstaining, and similar blights of wear and tear not appreciably affecting more than a few volumes. One of the badly damaged works is \textit{Revenge of Edo’s Golden Nugget Girl} (\textit{Edo sunago musume katakiuchi} 「江戸砂子娘敵討」, 1804, written by Kyôden and illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa 北尾重政). This is actually a notable piece, providing humorously confabulated etymologies (\textit{kojitsuke 故事付}) for many of the famous people and places of the day (though the story is set several centuries earlier). Another one, titled \textit{Quintuple Cut-Down at the Watermelon Stand} (\textit{Goningiri suika no tachiuri} 「五人切西瓜斬売」, 1804, written by Kyôden and illustrated by Eishôsai Chôki 根松斎長喜), is a wonderfully inventive “house succession piece” (\textit{ōie sôdômono お家騒動物}) involving per-

\begin{figure}[h]
\centering
\includegraphics[width=0.4\textwidth]{frontispiece.png}
\caption{Frontispiece to Ōtsu’s Specialty Products (Ōtsu no meibutsu, 1781).\footnote{\textit{Kibyôshi} written by Iba Kashô and illustrated by Kitao Masanobu. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.}}
\end{figure}

\begin{figure}[h]
\centering
\includegraphics[width=0.4\textwidth]{sketch.png}
\caption{A reader’s sketch (right) of a character (left). From \textit{Mongaku’s Subscription List} (\textit{Mongaku kanjincho}, 1793).\footnote{\textit{Kibyôshi} written by Nansenshô Somahito and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.}}
\end{figure}
Overall, then, the physical condition of the collection’s kibyōshi is somewhat disappointing. A few pieces at the MFA are similarly vexed, it might be mentioned for comparison’s sake, yet overall, my impression, after having thumbed through nearly a hundred titles, is that long years of isolation have admirably preserved its kibyōshi. Thus, the works in the Harvard-Yenching Library have either not fared as well over the years, or else were never in peak shape when originally acquired.

Strengths of the Collection

Happily, the Harvard-Yenching collection has many virtues. For one thing, it provides some representative aspects of the genre. Santō Kyōden’s Tsukiji Zenkō’s Mathematical Manual for Merchants (Tsukiji no Zenkōki 通気智之銭光記), 1802), for instance, includes at the end of its first fascicle a notice of newly issued titles by several different authors (Fig 4). For another thing, ten professional authors are represented in the collection of works catalogued as kibyōshi. Nine of these authors penned one work each. Some are major writers of the period (though not necessarily most famously in the kibyōshi), such as Shikitei Sanba, Jippensha Ikku, and Kyokutei Bakin. Others, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802). Other authors, though perhaps obscure to the average student of Japanese literary history, were popular in their own day, such as Kanwatei Onitate, Kenkō, Nansenshō Somahito, Nōsan Kōchō, Sakuragawa Jihinari, Ichiba Tsukiji no Zenkō, 1802).

Missing from the roster, however, are many of the greatest authors of the genre: Hōseidō Kisanji, Ōta Nanpo, Ichiba Tsūshō, Shiba Zenkō, Shira Banshō, Koikawa Harumachi. In this respect, as mentioned above, the Harvard-Yenching collection may be wanting.

---

20 The title of this work pivots the name Tsukiji Zenkō, which refers not to Morishima Chūryō (as the scholar Koike Tōgorō suggests in Santō Kyōden no kenkyū) but to the kabuki actor Bandō Zenji, with Jinkō, a mathematical text first published in 1627 but reissued repeatedly throughout the Edo period. In Tanahashi, Kibyōshi sōran 3, pp. 66-67.

interjecting a series of lectures on “Mind Study” (shingaku 心学) presented by a monk in the form of pictorial storytelling (etoki 絵解き), this kibyōshi wears its didacticism on its sleeve too blatantly, according to Mutō Motoaki (Fig 5). Although it would be foolhardy to assign any moralistic work to Bakin merely because his yomihon would later deal famously with the Confucian injunction “commend virtue, condemn vice” (kanzen chōaku 勤善懲惡), Bakin is more likely an author than Kyōden, whose depression over the premature death of his beloved wife around that time resulted in a slump in his publishing activities.

Then again, Bakin’s kibyōshi themselves were undeniably marked by a strong didactic bent. This is certainly true of The Unfathomable Ocean of Fortune and Longevity (Fukujukai muryō no shinadama 福寿海無量品玉), 1794, illustrated by Hokusai under the pseudonym Shunrō, which is also in the collection. The story centers around Fudarakuaya Daijirō 普陀落屋大次郎, who is disowned for having squandered the family fortune on women in the pleasure quarters. Daijirō and his wife, and then those close to them, begin to question their lifestyle, and eventually see the light of Buddhist teachings.

Another reason is that Bakin himself confessed—in both his biography of Kyōden (Iwademo no ki 「伊波伝毛乃記」, 1819) and his study of mid-Edo period authors (Kinsei mono no hon Edo sakusha burui 「近世物之本江戸作者部類」, 1834)—that he ghostwrote two of Kyōden’s kibyōshi: The Stinky Potted Plant at the Dragon King’s Palace (Tatsunomiya konamagusa hachinokiki 「龍宮醜鉢木」, 1793) as well as The Guide to Morality for Dummies.25 Other writers at the time likewise recognized Bakin as the true author of these pieces.26

Granted, it was standard practice for members of an artistic atelier to execute a work and have the master sign it. However, this is one of the earliest known cases of kibyōshi ghostwriting. Since the kibyōshi had already become a phenomenally popular form of mass literature—with the names of authors commanding a reading public in a way analogous to brand names on commercial goods27—it is possible that either Kyōden or his publisher had Bakin use the Kyōden moniker simply to sell copies.

---

24 This work was later reprinted—suggesting its popularity—under the title Yōjin kanshin 「用心肝心」.
26 In Tanahashi Masahiro, Kibyōshi sōran 2, p. 236.
In that sense, this work is important to the history of professional authorship in Japan. In fact, it may even be more valuable as an example of ghostwriting than if this were merely another work by Kyōden.

It is well known in Japanese studies that many, if not most, of the greatest professional woodblock artists illustrated various forms of popular literature like the kibyōshi. The Harvard-Yenching collection includes a respectfully representative sampling: 3 or so works by Hokusai (1760-1849) (1 under the pseudonym Shunrō 春朗, 1 under Kakō 可候, and possibly 1 under Hokushū 北周); 3 works by Utagawa Toyokuni 歌川豊国 (1769-1825); and 4 works by Kitao Shigemasa 北尾重政 (1739-1820), the head of the ukiyoe school bearing his name and one of the most prolific kibyōshi illustrators. (Actually, one work the catalogue identifies as having been illustrated by Shigemasa—Tsukiji Zenkō’s Mathematical Manual for Merchants—bears Toyokuni’s name on the title slip. If true, there would be 4 works by Toyokuni and only 3 works by Shigemasa in the collection.)

In the case of the two works that bear no name of an artist, the author himself—Kyōden and Ikkū—can be presumed to have provided the pictures. Kyōden’s piece (or at least the facsimile of it), Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice, is discussed below in greater detail. Ikkū’s piece, A Book of Revenge in Reverse (Tatakiuchi henjutsu no maki 「剃討変術巻」, 1796), it is worth mentioning, comically inverts the standard vendetta story by having the avengers, the brothers Suikakunosuke 水角の助 and Mōtarō 講太郎, frantically avoid avenging their father’s death, while the “avenger,” one Ishinoue Sanpei 石上三平, desperately tries to get assassinated.

One work notable for its curious illustrations, The Back-Alley Palm Reader (Urayasan mitōshi zashiki 「柳屋算通坐敷」, 1803, written by Kyōden, illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa), represents a relatively late kibyōshi, since the genre is customarily said to have petered out in 1806. Drawing on physiognomy, palmistry, and fortune-telling (hakke 八卦), this “satirical parody book” (kojitsuke ugatsu kokkei mitatemono 故事付穿つ滑稽見立物) lampoons a variety of people’s deportment as contrasted with their characters (Fig 6).

Another captivating work is the little-known Field Guide to the Monsters of Japan (Bakemono Yamato honzō 「化物和本草」, 1798, written by Santō Kyōden, illustrated by Hokusai under the pseudonym Kakō). This title playfully alludes to Field Guide to Japan (Yamato honzō 「大和本草」, 1709), Kaibara Ekken’s 貝原益軒 renowned compendium of materia medica. Field Guide to the Monsters of Japan is part of a trilogy of kibyōshi that transforms images of plants and trees, various implements (dōgu 道具), and assorted phenomena (jishō 事象), into some kind of amusing “visual pun” (mitate 見立 on shape-changing monsters (bakemono 化物). Hokusai’s illustrations are superb—imaginative, surprising, engrossing—and include renderings of the famed money tree (kane no naruki 金のなる木), a two-headed brush (ryōtō fude 肌頭筆), and a monster that is comprised of a love letter, a cobweb, and spectacles, among other disparate objects that speak to the richness of the contemporaneous popular imagination (Fig 7).

---

Figure 7 Imaginatively concocted creature from Field Guide to the Monsters of Japan (Bakemono Yamato honzō, 1798).

Storied Collection
Several of the stories are quite compelling unto themselves. One that might interest English readers, since its two base texts have been translated (unlike almost all other kibyōshi mentioned in this article), is Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōtō hitsu zen’aku nikki 「両頭筆善悪日記」, 1799, written and presumably illustrated by Santō Kyōden—though, again, this particular specimen is probably a later reprinting). The base texts are: Kyōden’s celebrated Fast-Dyeing Mind Study (Shingaku hayasomegusa 「学急染術」, 1790), about a man, named Ritarō 理太郎, pulled this way and that by tiny creatures whose faces are represented by circles containing the Chinese characters for “virtue” (zen 善) and “vice” (aku 悪); and Kyōden’s less well-known Unseamly Silverpiped Swingers (Sogitsugi gingiseru 「扮接銀管」, 1788), about the life, loves, and vicissitudes of a pair of one-bodied two-headed twins.

In Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice, the wife of Yamakawa Momoemon 山川屋桃右衛門 (in a scene more textually than visually reminiscent of the Peach Boy legend) finds a pair of peaches floating down a river. Well after she and her husband have eaten one peach each, she gives birth to two-headed offspring (Fig 8).

Figure 8 Two-headed twins suckling at their mother’s breasts. From a reprinting of the kibyōshi titled Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōtō hitsu zen’aku nikki, 1799).

As the twins grow, it becomes clear that one head is meek, honest, and hard working, whereas the other is aggressive, deceitful, and lazy (Fig 9).

Figure 9 Virtue is industrious, working an abacus as he keeps the books, while Vice is indolent, making rude remarks as he enjoys a smoke. From a reprinting of Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōtō hitsu zen’aku nikki, 1799).
The conflict between the two comes to a head, so to speak, afflicting even their dreams (Fig 10). Eventually an exorcist uses a mallet to pound Vice into a lump, leaving Virtue in tact, an artificially contrived happy ending that could only have been received by contemporary readers, in an age of increasingly enforced sumptuary regulations, as unrealistic to the point of sharp irony. In fact, it is said that Two-Headed Brush influenced subsequent works in this respect, most notably Shikitei Sanba’s kibyōshi titled A Plug for the Miraculously Healing Bodywarmer (Wataonjaku kikō no hikifuda 「綿温石奇効報条」).37

Sanna’s piece has a brilliant conception: it treats the creation of the cosmos in the classic Chronicles of Japan (Nihon shōki 「日本書紀」, 720) as though it were the result of a contemporary gathering of kabuki playwrights at the beginning of the year to determine the “worlds” of plots and characters to be staged. Thus, the “world setting” (sekai sadame 世界定め) of the kabuki theater is taken literally, reinserted into the cosmogony sequence of one of Japan’s most sacred texts. Set in the mythical age of the gods, Sanna’s story retraces the transition from prehistoric chaos and non-differentiation, to the creation of all things (banbutsu 万物) and the arising of the various deities themselves (Fig 11). The story was so well received, Shikitei Sanba hailed it as one of the two dozen greatest masterpieces of the genre. Certainly the story sparked the imagination of other authors as well as readers, for several kibyōshi borrowed its comic premise. Aside from Kyōden’s Fast-Dyeing Mind Study, there was Hōseidō Kisanji’s The Celestial Path’s Account Book (Tendō daifuku chō 「天道大福帳」, 1786).

Figure 10 Two-headed twins dreaming a common dream. From a reprinting of Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōtō hitsu zen’aku nikki, 1799).38

Figure 11 Beginning of the cosmos according to Beyond the Pale-ings of the Billion Worlds (Daisen sekai kakine no soto 「大千世界関外」, 1784).

One of the only “Golden Age” pieces in the collection is Tōrai Sanna’s Beyond the Pale-ings of the Billion Worlds (Daisen sekai kakine no soto 「大千世界関外」, 1784, illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa).39 Published only a year after Sanna’s début in any genre of playful fiction—the fashionbook titled The Three Creeds on Passion (Sankyōki 「三教色」, 1783)—this is the first kibyōshi bearing Sanna’s name, though it has been suggested that Sanna had previously served as a ghostwriter to author Shimizu Enjū 志水燕十. Be that as it may, Tōrai Sanna 唐來参和 (1744-1810) himself is one of the more colorful figures in the history of Edo’s playful fiction, having renounced his samurai

---

37 In Tanahashi, Kibyōshi sōran 2, p. 676.
38 ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.
40 Kibyōshi written by Tōrai Sanna and illustrated probably by Kitao Shigemasa. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.
status to become an urban townsman (chōnin 町人) merchant and take up writing professionally. He was a member of Ōta Nanpo’s leading coterie of madcap poetry (kyōka 狂歌), wrote a smattering of fashion-books and multivolume comicbooks as well, and became one of the “Six Kibyōshi Immortals” (kibyōshi rokkasen 黄表紙六歌仙), though he penned only about twenty kibyōshi, including the palindromatically titled Chop Not The Roots of The Money Tree (Kiruna no ne kara kane no naruki 「英切自根金生木」, 1785). Sanba, who had been one of Kyōden’s protégés, is said to have integrated the “San” of Sanna’s name into his own. Moreover, Sanna actually became the proprietor of a brothel. According to Bakin, Sanna was “[o]riginally a retainer for a highly-placed family, during the Tenmei era, he had reason to become a chōnin. He married into the family that ran the brothel Izumiya in Honjo Matsui-chō. He took over the business and came to be called [by the merchant appellation] Izumiya Genzō.”

Another work in the collection, Shitchin Manpō’s The About-Face Bestowal of Abundant Beauty (Sono henpō hōnen no Mitsugi「其返報豊年貢」, 1790, illustrated by Katsushika Shun’ei—or at least in his style), is significant as one of the kibyōshi that partook in genuine political satire through the technique of reductio ad absurdum. Published during the Kansei Reforms (and reprinted two years later under the title Haru wa hanasaku sakusha no yaezaki 「新春花作者再咏」), this piece couched its criticism of the government’s sumptuary regulations by poking fun at similar measures half a millennium earlier, during the reign of the sagacious ruler Hōjō Tokiyori 北条時頼 (1227-1263), who famously disguised himself to mix with commoners. In Manpō’s story, the populace takes Tokiyori’s exhortations to their extreme, mistaking frugality for stinginess, the result being that restaurants, tea houses, and candy shops go out of business. Watermelon merchants discount the cost of their rinds, even (Fig 12). Tokiyori realizes that the populace has taken his words too literally when, in disguise, visiting the house of a certain Sano Genzaemon 佐野源左衛門, the latter chops down his potted tree for firewood to keep his visitor warm.

Figure 12 Watermelon stand from The About-Face Bestowal of Abundant Beauty (Sono henpō hōnen no Mitsugi, 1790).42

Another work in the collection, one that does not seem to be well known, illustrates the twilight of the kibyōshi genre, which in its last years increasingly came to be given over to the kind of dramatic complexity and violence of the multivolume, or gōkan. The kibyōshi, titled Twice-Flowering Eightfold Vengeance (Kaerizaki yae no adauchi 「返咲八重之仇討」), penned by Kanwatei Onitake and illustrated by Hokusai under yet another pseudonym, (Hokushū), was published in 1805, a year before what most scholars accept as the final batch of kibyōshi. It is even possible that this work might be thought of as an early gōkan.

Set during the fourteenth century, the story begins with a disagreement between two followers of the Ashikaga minister Momoi 桃井, Lord of Harima, that quickly escalates into a duel to the death. When one of these followers, Kani Sogorō 可児增五郎, kills the other, Kohaya Gendayū 小早源大夫, the latter’s son Gennosuke 源之丞 enlists the aid of a martial arts master Daikan Kenzō 大関賢三 to exact revenge. Master Kenzō indeed kills Sogorō. But instead of being rewarded for his fearless efforts, he... is poisoned; for Gennosuke is afraid that word would leak that he had not settled the score himself. The story concludes when one of Kenzō’s disciples, Makino Manpei まきの万平, suspicious about his master’s death, extracts the truth from the local doctor about the poison and proceeds to take his own revenge upon Gennosuke. Needless to say, this is not the sort of lighthearted romp that for a quarter century had epitomized the kibyōshi genre (Fig 13).

Figure 13 Heads roll in Twice-Flowering Eightfold Vengeance (Kaerizaki yae no adauchi, 1805). 43

Finally, there is Sakuragawa Jihinari’s 桜川慈悲成 (b. 1762) A Tale of Virtue in the First Degree (Daiichi ontokuyō monogatari 「第一御徳用物語」, 1794). In spite of having been illustrated by the great Utagawa Toyokuni, the story probably outshines the charming pictures. The piece is an imaginative installment in the long line of kibyōshi (and other stories, for that matter) about dreams, dream pillows, and the confusion of dream with reality. A certain man by the name of Fukukurō 福九郎, who sleeps by night and naps all day, strikes upon the idea of starting a business peddling people’s naps. His neighbor Mune’emon むね右衛門 erects the “Sleep Inclined Hut” (Nemukean 寝向庵) to attract prospective nap sellers. Eventually, the Seven Gods of Fortune (Shichifukujin 七福神), worried about the adverse effects of nap mongering upon humankind, force Fukukurō to give up his sack of naps wherein he has been storing the world’s supply of ‘sleep essence’ (minki 眠気). In a satirical gesture against the utopian vision espoused by Confucians of a hardworking populace, Daikokuten, along with the other gods on their fabled treasure boat, casts the nap sack to the Western Seas, whereupon naps are supposedly dispelled forever from the face of the earth (Fig 14).

Figure 14 The god Daikokuten dispelling naps. From A Tale of Virtue in the First Degree (Daiichi ontokuyō monogatari, 1794). 44

Concluding Remarks
And so does our guided tour of the Harvard-Yenching collection of kibyōshi draw to a close in the short span of a dream during an afternoon snooze. Although small, slightly lopsided, and in less than ideal shape, the collection is nonetheless fascinating if wonderfully quirky. If I am correct in reckoning that the 16 titles listed in the catalogue Early Japanese Books at Harvard-Yenching Library should be revised to 25 titles, then the collection is also larger than previously believed.

This number depends on my definition of the kibyōshi, which is not simply any book with yellow covers. Rather, in the foregoing I have effectively defined the kibyōshi as a sophisticated comicbook, combining words and pictures in complex fashion, intended primarily for adults. Although the kibyōshi usually bears yellow covers, sometimes its covers can be blue. The kibyōshi usually comes in three fascicles of 10 pages measuring approximately 5 x 7 inches, though there are examples of one, two, and, 44 Kibyōshi written by Sakuragawa Jihinari and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

---

in some rare cases, five fascicles in this size, but never four (the Japanese word for which being infe-llicitously homophonous with “death”), and never more than five. Furthermore, the kibyōshi was only published from 1775 to 1806 (though there are a few exceptions), so later reprints—particularly those in a different format—would hardly qualify as a kibyōshi.
Finally, most kibyōshi in Japan are listed in Tanaha-shi’s Kibyōshi Overview, though one might quibble with Tanahashi on some minor points.

According to this criteria, then, it would seem that the official catalogue of the Harvard-Yenching Library lists some works as kibyōshi that really are something else and conversely lists as something else works that really are kibyōshi. If so, then one naturally wonders if a similar situation obtains in other collections outside of Japan. One imagines, perhaps, that lurking in such collections are some as-yet undiscovered hidden gems.

Appendix I: Selective List of Works,
Authors, Illustrators, and Publishers

NB HYL numbers derive from the catalogue Early Japanese Books at Harvard-Yenching Library.

Bakemono Yamato honzō 「怪物和本草」
(Field Guide to the Monsters of Japan, 1798).
Kibyōshi written by Santō Kyōden, illustrated by Kakō (Hokusai), and published by Yamaguchiya.
HYL #350

Bunkeidō 文溪堂

Daiichi ontoku yō monogatari 「第一御徳用物
語」 (A Tale of Virtue in the First Degree, 1794).
Kibyōshi written by Sakuragawa Jihinari, illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni, and published by Izumiya
Ichibe. HYL #361

Daisen sekai kakine no soto 「大千世界の
外」 (Beyond the Pale-ings of the Billion Worlds, 1784). Kibyōshi written by Tōrai Sanna, illustrated probably by Kitao Shigemasa, and published by Tsunaya Jūzaburō. HYL #357

Edo sunago museme katakiuchi 「江戸砂子娘
敵討」 (Revenge of Edo’s Golden Nuggets Girl, 1804). Kibyōshi written by Santō Kyōden, thought to have been illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa, and published by Tsuruya. HYL #354

Eishōsai Chōki 栄松斎長喜

Enokimotoya 榊本屋

Enju hangontan 「延寿反魂談」 (The Salutary
Story of a Soul Restored, 1789). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) written and illustrated by Santō Kyōden. HYL #343

Fukujukai murō no shinadama 「福寿海無量 品玉」 (The Unfathomable Ocean of Fortune and Longevity, 1794). Kibyōshi written by Kyokutei Bakin, illustrated by Katsukawa Shunrō, and published by Tsuruya. HYL #363

Goningiri suika no tachiuri 「五人切西瓜斬
売」 (Quintuple Cut-Down at the Watermelon Stand, 1804). Kibyōshi written by Santō Kyōden, illustrated by Eishōsai Chōki, and published by Tsunaya Jūzaburō. HYL #353

Gozonji no shōbaimono 「御存知商売物」
(Those Familiar Bestsellers, 1782). Kibyōshi written and illustrated by Kitao Masanobu.

Hatsuyaku kogane no eboshi uo 「初役金烏帽
子魚」 (Début of the Black-Capped Golden Carp, 1794). Illustrated book written by Santō Kyōden, illustrated by Jippensha Ikku, and published by Tsunaya Jūzaburō. HYL #341

Hokusai 北斎 (a.k.a. Katsushika Hokusai 聖師
北斎, Hokushū, Kakō, Shunrō)

Hokushū 北周 (a.k.a. Hokusai)

Hōseidō Kisanji 朋誠堂喜三二

Ichiba Tsūshō 市場通笑

Iba Kashō 伊庭可笑

Iseji 伊勢治

Iwatoya 岩戸屋

Izumiya Ichibe 藤井市兵衛
Jippesha Ikku 柱舍一九

Jitsugokyō osana kōshaku 「実語教幼稚講釈」 (The Guide to Morality for Dummies, 1792). Kibyōshi supposedly written by Santō Kyōden—but ghostwritten by Bakin—illustrated by Shunrō (Hokusai). Published by Tsutaya Jūzaburō. HYL #348

Kaerizaki yae no adauchi 「返咲八重之仇討」 (Twice-Flowering Eightfold Vengeance, 1805). Kibyōshi written by Kanwatei Onitake, illustrated by Hokushō (Hokusai), and published by Iwatoya. HYL #356

Kanwatei Onitake 感和町鬼武

Kakō 可候 (a.k.a. Hokusai)

Katakiuchi Kurama tengu 「敵討鞍馬天狗」 (The Kurama Goblin Vendetta, 1779). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) written by Bunkidō, illustrated by Torii Kiyotsune, and published by Iwatoya. HYL #339

Katsukawa Shun’ei 葛川春英

Kenkō 嫌好

Kingin sensei zōka no yume 「金々先生依化夢」 (Master Flashgold’s Abiding Dream, 1794). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) written by Santō Kyōden, illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa, and published by Tsutaya Jūzaburō. HYL #340

Kinkin sensei eiga no yume 「金々先生栄華夢」 (Master Flashgold’s Splendiderous Dream, 1779). Kibyōshi written by Koikawa Harumachi and illustrated by Hōseiō Kisanji.

Kiruna no ne kara kane no naruki 「莫切自根金生木」(Chop Not The Roots of The Money Tree, 1785). Kibyōshi written by Tōrai Sanna and illustrated by Kitagawa Chiyojo.

Kitagawa Chiyojo 喜多川千代女

Kitao Masanobu 北尾政演 (a.k.a. Santō Kyōden)

Kitao Masayoshi 北尾政美

Kitao Shigemasa 北尾重政

Koikawa Harumachi 恋川春町

Kore otohime 「是男度比女」 (Otohime, Princess of the Sea, 1784). Kibyōshi in two fascicles written and illustrated by Kenkō and published by Murataya. HYL #360

Kotowaza Nonomiya mōde 「謳野々宮儲」 (Nonomiya’s Proverbially Profitable Gambol, 1784). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) illustrated and presumably written by Kitao Masayoshi, and published by Tsutaya Jūzaburō. HYL #334

Kusunoki ichidaiki 「楠一代記」 (The Life of Kusunoki Masashige, 1794). Some kind of picturebook written and presumably illustrated by Rakugetsudo Sōshi. Published by Tsutaya Jūzaburō. HYL #324

Kyokutei Bakin 曲亭馬琴 (a.k.a. Takizawa Bakin)

Mongaku kanjinchō 「文覚劵進帳」 (Mon­gaku’s Subscription List, 1793). Kibyōshi written by Nansenshō Somahito, illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni, and published by Enokimotoya. HYL #349

Murataya 村田屋

Nansenshō Somahito 南仙笑楚満人

Natori no kiku kōhaku chōja 「名取菊白長者」 (The Flowery Tale of Masters Gold and Silver, 1779). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) probably written and illustrated by Santō Kyōden. HYL #342

Nishimiya Shinroku 西宮新六

Ōta Nanpo 大田南敏

Ōtsu no meibutsu 「大津名物」 (Ōtsu’s Specialty Products, 1781). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) written by Iba Kashō, illustrated by Kitao Masanobu, and published by Iwatoya. HYL #332

Rakugetsudo Sōshi 落月堂操宛
Laid to Rest, Part Two: A Tale of Spring Snow

Sakuragawa Jihinari 桜川慈成

Sanbukutsui murasaki Soga 「參幅對紫曽我」 (Trilateral Intrigue of the Soga Brothers, 1778). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) illustrated and presumably written by Koikawa Harumachi and published by Urokogataya. HYL #333

Santō Kyōden 山東京傳

Shiba Zenkō 芝全交

Shikitei Sanba 式亭三馬

Shimizu Enjū 志水燕十

Shin kakurezato 「暗金久連里」 (The Invisible City Revisited, 1788). Bluebook illustrated and presumably written by Torii Kiyoshige. HYL #335

Shinya Banshō 森羅万象

Shitchin Manpō 七珍萬宝

Shunrō 春朗 (a.k.a. Hokusai)

Shunsetsu monogatari 「春雪物語」 (Tale of Spring Snow, 1804). A.k.a. A Mother and Daughter Laid to Rest, Part Two: A Tale of Spring Snow (『お前手廼春雪物語』). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) written by Nansenshō Somahito and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni. HYL #346

Sono henpō hōnen no mitsugi「其返報豐年貫」 (The About-Face Bestowal of Abundant Beauty, 1790). Kibyōshi written by Shitchin Manpō, illustrated probably by Katsushika Shun’ei, and published by Iseji. HYL #359

Takizawa Bakin 滝沢馬琴 (a.k.a. Kyokutei Bakin)

Tamenaga Shunsui 炎永春水

Tatariuchi henjutsu no maki 「郷討変術卷」 (A Book of Revenge in Reverse, 1796). Kibyōshi written—and presumably illustrated—by Jippensha Ikku and published by Izumiya Ichibei. HYL #362

Tatsunomiya konamagusa hachinoki 「麗宮薔鉢木」 (The Stinky Potted Plant at the Dragon King’s Palace, 1793). Kibyōshi supposedly written by Santō Kyōden—but ghostwritten by Bakin—and published by Tsuruya.

Tendō daifuku chō 「天道大福帳」 (The Celestial Path’s Account Book, 1786). Kibyōshi written by Hōseidō Kisanji and illustrated by Kitao Masayoshi.

Tōrai Sanna 唐来參和

Torii Kiyoshige 鳥居清重

Torii Kiyotsune 鳥居清経

Tōsetsu monogatari 「冬雪物語」 (A Tale of Winter Snow, 1804). A.k.a. A Mother and Daughter Laid to Rest, Part One: A Tale of Winter Snow (『お前手廼冬雪物語』). Kibyōshi (miscatalogued as a bluebook) written by Nansenshō Somahito and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni. HYL #345

Tsukiji no Zenkō 「通氣智之銭光記」 (Tsukiji Zenkō’s Mathematical Manual for Merchants, 1802). Kibyōshi written by Santō Kyōden, illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa, and published by Tsuruya. HYL #355

Tsuruya Kiemon 鶴屋喜右衛門

Tsutaya Jūzaburō 萬屋重三郎

Urayasan mitoshi zashiki 「裡家算見通坐敷」 (The Back-Alley Palm Reader, 1803). Kibyōshi written by Santō Kyōden, illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa, and published by Tsuruya. HYL #352
Appendix II: List of Figures

Fig 1 Scene from Master Flashgold’s Abiding Dream (Kingin sensei zōka no yume, 1794). Kibyōshi written by Santō Kyōden and illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 2 Frontispiece to Ōtsu’s Specialty Products (Ōtsu no meibutsu, 1781). Kibyōshi written by Iha Kashō and illustrated by Kitao Masanobu. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 3 A reader’s sketch of a character from Mongaku’s Subscription List (Mongaku kanjinchō, 1793). Kibyōshi written by Nansenshō Somahito and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 5 Scene from The Guide to Morality for Dummies (Jitsugokyo osana kōshaku, 1792). Kibyōshi supposedly written by Santō Kyōden—but really ghostwritten by Bakin—and illustrated by Shunrō (Hokusai). ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 6 Physiognomy charts from The Back-Alley Palm Reader (Urayasan mitōshi zashiki, 1803). Kibyōshi written by Kyōden and illustrated by Kitao Shigemasa. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 7 Imaginatively concocted creature from Field Guide to the Monsters of Japan (Bakemono Yamato honzō, 1798). Kibyōshi written by Kyōden and illustrated by Kakō (Hokusai). ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 8 Two-headed twins suckling at their mother's breasts. From a reprinting of the kibyōshi titled Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōō hitsu zen’aku nikki, 1799). Written and presumably illustrated by Kyōden. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 9 Virtue is industrious, working an abacus as he keeps the books, while Vice is indolent, making rude remarks as he enjoys a smoke. From a reprinting of Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōō hitsu zen’aku nikki, 1799). ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 10 Two-headed twins dreaming a common dream. From a reprinting of Diary Penned by a Two-Headed Brush with Virtue and Vice (Ryōō hitsu zen’aku nikki, 1799). ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 11 Beginning of the cosmos according to Beyond the Pale-ings of the Billion Worlds (Daisen sekai kakine no soto, 1784). Kibyōshi written by Tōrai Sanna and illustrated probably by Kitao Shigemasa. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 12 Watermelon stand from The About-Face Bestowal of Abundant Beauty (Sono hennō hōnen no mitsugi, 1790). Kibyōshi written by Shitchin Manpō and illustrated probably by Katsushika Shun’ei. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 13 Heads roll in Twice-Flowering Eightfold Vengeance (Kaerizaki yae no audauchi, 1805). Kibyōshi written by Kanwatei Onitake and illustrated by Hokushû (Hokusai). ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.

Fig 14 The god Daikokuten dispelling naps. From A Tale of Virtue in the First Degree (Daiichi ontokuyō monogatari, 1794). Kibyōshi written by Sakuragawa Jinhari and illustrated by Utagawa Toyokuni. ©2007 Harvard-Yenching Library.