ARCHITECTURAL DEPARTMENT NOTES

On April 28, Professor Sears, head of the landscape department, gave a most interesting as well an intellectual talk on "English Gardens." He started out with the very earliest known gardening done in England and traced its developments up to the present day. It was similar to the history of most anything you may trace back. At times it rushed ahead at great speed, then it would stop and maybe slide back for a while, then jump ahead again.

The lecture was very finely illustrated with many lantern slides. He explained, in a most clear manner, the design and peculiarities of each garden and period.
