Daniel Drezner, Associate Professor of International Politics at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University, speaks on “The Viscosity of Global Governance” on Jan. 19, 2007, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies. His talk was the first in the Globalization, Institutions, and Economic Security Workshop, co-sponsored by the Department of Political Science.

Daniel Drezner stands with Alex Thompson (right) and Sarah Brooks, both Assistant Professors of Political Science and organizers of the Globalization, Institutions, and Economic Security Workshop. In his talk, Drezner argued that the proliferation of institutions that settle international disputes has resulted in outcomes based on power rather than the rule of law because large countries can engage in forum shopping.
