The Sino-American Security Dialogue was a project conceived by Julia Andrews, Director of OSU’s East Asian Studies Center, Bin Yu, Professor of Political Science at Wittenberg University, and Peter Griese, Professor of Political Science at the University of Colorado, who sought an opportunity to bring together the young generation of highly skilled security experts from both China and the United States. Their goal was simple: to provide a forum for these scholars to frankly share their ideas before they move into prominent positions that limit candor.

SASD became a freer environment for discussions of Sino-American security, offering participants a chance to develop a common language to think about, discuss, and share Chinese and American security cultures.

Participants included:

CHINA
Qingguo Jia, Peking University
Canrong Jin, School of Int. Studies, Remin University
Jun Niu, Peking University
Jianyi Piao, Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences
Zongze Ruan, China Institute of International Studies, MOF
Shiping Tang, Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences
Yiwei Wang, Fudan University, Shanghai
Xinbo Wu, Fudan University, Shanghai
Hui Xu, National Defense University and Chinese Academy of Social Sciences
Peng Yuan, CICIR
Qingmin Zhang, China Foreign Affairs College
Feng Zhu, Peking University
Ted Hopf, Ohio State
Jeremie Waterman, U.S.-China Business Council

Allen Carlson, Cornell University
Tom Christensen, Princeton University
Evan Feigenbaum, U.S. Department of State
Taylor Fravel, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Peter Gries, University of Colorado
Evan Medeiros, RAND Corporation
Derek Mitchell, Center for Strategic and International Studies
Shelley Rigger, Davidson College
Phillip Saunders, National Defense University
Scot Tanner, RAND Corporation
Chris Twomey, Naval Postgraduate School
Richard Herrmann, Ohio State
Mary Cooper, Ohio State
Yu Bin, Wittenberg College