

Christina Davis, Assistant Professor of Politics at Princeton University, speaks on "The Politics of Opening Markets: A Comparison of Bilateral and Multilateral Trade Negotiation Strategies" on February 29, 2008, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Autumn Lockwood-Payton (standing), Ph.D. student in Political Science, provides a critique of Christina Davis's paper on February 29, 2008, at the Mershon Center.

Christina Davis speaks with Daniel Verdier, Professor of Political Science, during a reception after her talk on February 29, 2008, at the Mershon Center. Verdier specializes in international political economy and is author of Democracy and International Trade and Moving Money.

(Left to right) Sarah Brooks and Alex Thompson, Assistant Professors of Political Science, stand with Christina Davis and Autumn Lockwood-Payton on February 29, 2008, at the Mershon Center. Davis spoke at Mershon as part of the Globalization, Institutions and Economic Security (GIES) Workshop, which Brooks and Thompson organize.