

Nita Rudra, Assistant Professor of International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh, speaks on "Have Governments Gone Too Far?" on May 23, 2008, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies. The talk was part of the center's Globalization, Institutions and Economic Security (GIES) Workshop.

Kadir Yildirim, Ph.D. student in Political Science, provides a critique of Nita Rudra's paper at the Globalization, Institutions and Economic Security (GIES) Workshop, held May 23, 2008, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies. In the paper, co-authored with Assistant Professor of Political Science Irfan Nooruddin, Rudra examines research that links globalization to social service cuts in developing countries.

Sarah Brooks (left) and Irfan Nooruddin (center), both Assistant Professors of Political Science, stand with Nita Rudra, Assistant Professor of International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh, on May 23, 2008, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies. Brooks is a co-sponsor of the Mershon Center's Globalization, Institutions and Economic Security (GIES) Workshop.