FORMER BUSINESS MANAGER
WRITES FROM ENGLAND

The following letter was received from Russell Bartholomew, former business manager of The Engineer, by Dean Charles E. MacQuigg. Bartholomew received his commission in the Corps of Engineers after leaving Ohio State last June. He made use of the new V-Mail and the photostat was transmitted from New York:

Dear Dean MacQuigg:

Surprised to hear from me? Little did I realize two months ago that I would be somewhere in England by this time. Well, I am really enjoying myself even under the conditions we are here for. I am making the best of the situation and everyone is doing his part to get this affair over. We are treated very nicely by the English. They really believe in showing their hospitality.

Am interested to know how the old school is going. Surely wish I were going to school right now. I am interested in the work I am doing, but wish it were in peace time.

Hope the Ohio State Engineer is a big success for the coming year. I really hold that as one of my prize activities in college life.

Say hello to the office force for me and if you can find time to deviate from your daily work, will you write and tell me how you are? Hope to hear from you.

Yours truly,
