

Janice Bially Mattern, associate professor of international relations at Lehigh University, discussed her research on "The Emotional Politics of Transnational Crime," at the Mershon Center on November 6, 2009.

Janice Bially Mattern fielded questions from Mershon faculty during her lecture on "The Emotional Politics of Transnational Crime." Mershon faculty pictured are Randall Schweller (seated far left), professor of political science, Alex Wendt (seated second from right), Ralph D. Mershon Professor of International Security, and Ted Hopf (seated far right), associate professor of political science.

Janice Bially Mattern discussed her current project, which examines the role of emotion in mobilizing transnational crime networks to transnational political violence, at the Mershon Center on November 6, 2009.

Ted Hopf, associate professor of political science, asked Janice Bially Mattern to elaborate on a point she raised in her presentation, "The Emotional Politics of Transnational Crime." Hopf organized Bially Mattern's visit to the Mershon Center on November 6, 2009.