

Ted Hopf (left), professor of political science, talks with Jesse Crane-Seeber, postdoctoral fellow in the International Graduate School of Social Sciences at the University of Bremen in Germany, on February 22, 2010. Hopf invited Crane-Seeber to the Mershon Center to speak about "Multiple Masculinities in U.S. Military Culture."

Jesse Crane-Seeber, postdoctoral fellow at the International Graduate School of Social Sciences at University of Bremen in Germany, spoke about "Multiple Masculinities in U.S. Military Culture" on February 22, 2010, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies. Crane-Seeber's research involved interviewing dozens of U.S. soldiers deployed to Iraq.

Peter Mansoor (left), Gen. Raymond E. Mason Chair in Military History, talked with Jesse Crane-Seeber after his lecture on February 22, 2010, at the Mershon Center. Mansoor was interviewed by The New York Times this year for an extensive article about women in combat.