the

Lost

Found

Times

6

Mother I Don't

Remember

The Vet Staying

Since the last cough, a choke. I just split out a silk off the silk in that the. The moonlight off her through the casuistic tales in the clover shade on a bit of light in the Flower of gypsy cotton in your performance. Descend the sea by twill. Apart A cap in my old shop and a ruffle blouse

proceed by the bull nightly by the easel.

Subscription: $10 for 5 issues.
Back issues: Nos. 1-10, complete, $15.
Nos. 11, 12, 15, $3 ea.; no. 13/14, $5.
LUNA BISONTE PRODS., 137 Leland Ave., Columbus, Ohio 43214
(c) 1984 John M. Bennett. All rights revert to authors and artists upon publication.
SHE WAS SAWING

She was sawing through the crusty cranium out the back behind his head mumbling to herself some barely audible crud about tadpoles in the paste bucket like semen not getting any younger The only fucker what does it right his skin growing redder than his flaming hair til his every surface was alight but still inside a refrigerated stone pulling on his cigarette I thought I saw his skull begin to collapse on its self but no when a man blows his stack its up up and away—not like us bitches vanishing into our own black holes he contrived to speak without a perceptible movement of any of his interlocked facial jigsaw pieces "Tracey where the hells my fuckin dinner you fat slag?" She made no reply but went on sawing through the soft grey sponge "You look like a fucking tadpole in them tight slacks." She twanged like a taut elastic band springs back her saw embedded in the tables surface her eyes embedded in his flaming red head.

A MAP

I ask you the way to where seeing that your face is a map of somewhere your eyes fresh painted railway stations where heavy trains pull in and out and people cling before uncoupling your noseholes the entrances to subways I've never been in but have felt the rush of trains under my feet your mouth a park where a man is feeding birds on a december afternoon his arms outstretched like a famous actor at curtain call

Snowhite Young
LIVING LIQUID

To freeze water cool to 32 degrees F.
To have rain water reach up and prick a cloud.
To water water add the salt variety to the fresh.
To smell water hike to Ludlow and circumvent a mineral spring at twenty paces.
To be water connect your spine to a cathode, dental inlays to the anode.
To sleep in water is a dream.
To cook with water draw it fresh cold into clean utensils.
To water animals lead them to overflowing troughs.
To rinse with water is to flush away the undesirable.
To taste water chew it slowly fresh cold from a hollow knot.
To drink water swallow a gushing faucet on New York City lines.
To feel water carriage to Minnewaska and crouching at Undercliff pick up handfuls caressing every drop.
To sit in water select tide-swept sand.
To understand exasperated water read the little book "Water-Fight".
To shed water be a duck.

Bern Porter

SUICIDE

Cease standing by hanging upon a vertical.
Cease breathing by freezing the lungs.
Cease seeing by unscrewing the eyeballs.
Cease hearing by piercing the tympanic membranes.
Cease tasting by singeing the tongue.
Cease smelling by etching the olfactory receptors.
Cease feeling by tarring the epidermis.
Cease being by evaporating.
Cease ceasing.

Bern Porter
CAPACITANCE

foil keeps the wind out, the wind out of my eyes, out of this maze escaping w/ what extra-terrestrial baggage: nothing but this planet, nothing i cant touch right now, not deceived by the voices from everywhere, those quad-tired ghosts that dissolve if they stop--- they dont stop

of my head--
the light from my eyes, from the back of my head--
the sky darkens when i tire of trying to break the magnetism of my house, swimming against the wind drawing me back to the stove, the refrigerator, the washer issuing orders & uniforms; i nap impatiently in the drier; i rub my sex into the outlet & scramble my prayers over the walls thick w/ years of monastic devotion--- whoever's knocking at barrier is too far from electricity to reach me digging softly into my wind & pulsed away, every time, by their faceless homing, their illegible vinyl pates: they fade coz they are nothing but within me the need to strengthen my house's winds by escape-- the further i go, the harder i snap back, the longer i stay awake, dull, uncharged, lightless unable to spark or mine the air with barbs of imbalance stunning with unexpected accuracy what thought stillness might heal

Dan Raphael

---

Land

This is the water and this is your face before me, your words that will never die burning inside me, your words made of flesh but still you fly in the early night sky past comets and stars, surrounded by flames, reflected in the water, surrounded by waves seven feet high and now I am crying into your hand and this is land. Black bird in a yellow cage, your red beak like a gasping fish, you throw out your line and hooked your own head but you were looking for yourself anyway, yourself mixed with pain, you said never wasn't such a long time, and I was looking for someone who was blind to sink into the earth with me, we would later resurrect as a moth or a fly banging against a lightbulb; someone with small and careful eyes that I could turn into water, a man with a tall running through the burning fields, a sparrow and a woman poking her finger through its eyes, me in the cage looking after them.

So this is land. The yellow door and the red window beckon. Your shadow, narrow and long and blue, gets kissed by many starving women. I run past bonfires blazing in the snow to get to you, your head wrapped in a sheet, your spirit rising out of you like a mermaid, but you're still alive, still in the act of appearing healthy, not the man who starved himself in a cage at the circus who was later replaced by a young tiger. You run through the streets with a dog in your arms that barks out that it never wants to die. your lover never runs. She sits trapped by her very own circle, the magic is the fire that never returns but never quite gets into her either.

And we've always known the water. Land is a mirage, a theory called the horizon, a straight line while we want to rise vertically. You kiss my mouth until it burns whether I'm wearing ten coats or a feather, you kiss my mouth until it's sore and later friends who want conversation find my door closed.
Water is the desert, both go on and on, soothingly, endlessly, completely at arms with themselves -- but land, we grab it in both hands and throw clods of earth at the running monkeys; we shovel out roots and climb into the trees, we steam ourselves but our feet keep walking, walking, always certain that we're walking on something. I sit on the ground, a transparent cup in my lap, holding it out to anyone who happens to pass me by, but instead you are a tiny matchstick flame high up on some mountain in that I see in the distance through rain, love, and tears, beckoning like a sailing giant, beckoning through year after year after year, longing for trouble, romance, destruction, your hand held up over the land that reminds us we're real.

Randall Brock

---

cut

blood

of a feathered

image

in yr eye

Christine Zawadiwsky
A COLUMN OF HIGH FINANCE AND DECORUM BY DR. AL ACKERMAN

"Dear Dr. Ali: I've heard that back in the mid-60s your friends called you "The Crab." I wish you'd fill us in on how this nickname came about, if it isn't too embarrassing," writes a reader from Bethlehem, Pa.

This is undoubtedly a widespread longing. But in order to fill you in on how I came to be called "The Crab," I have to first fill you in on how one summer I was at a ty~s diftn't even vacation from my regular hospital job and I got the idea that it might make an interesting experiment to go around town putting in bogus job applications, a routine that consisted of scanning the help wanted columns until I found a dismal-sounding job about which I knew absolutely nothing, and then doing right in and applying for it under an assumed name, which seemed preferable to using my own because it gave me a chance to see if anybody remembered "Harry Emerson Fosdick" or "Friederich Engels," though as it turned out they didn't even remember "Charles Starkweather," and nobody ever knew me for an imposter. I also made it a big point at each office I visited (this was one of the prime factors in my experiment) to personally exhibit different types of weird, obtrusive, and inappropriate behavior.

I started out by answering an ad for "Price Change Clerk For Wholesale Plumbing Supply—must know 10 key calculator." This seemed made to order for my first venture into the realm of bogus job hunting because I was completely in the dark as to what a price change clerk might be, and I knew no more about the 10 key calculator than does Emily Fusselman's rabbit. A rather humorless woman who looked a little like Turner does on the big screen and was the wife of the plumbing store owner interviewed me. Grudgingly she handed me a pencil and a few flimsy yellow forms to fill out and pointed me to a chair in the corner, and then proceeded to give me the double-o with a dism~y that was clear and unqualified. Most likely because the blue seerucker suit I was wearing on that sweltering day hadn't been cleaned or pressed since Christmas and I had gone three days without a shave or bath especially for the occasion. I'd also been careful to drink half a pint of fine Four Roses Whiskey before entering the establishment, and I peeked. I could feel her eyes on my filthy collar and stubby jowls and wrinkling her nose at the essence of Four Roses that came rolling off me at every breath, as from a pungent old cork. I spent a long, long time like that, hunched over the simple yellow forms, fumbling with my pencil, wheezing and sweating and mopping my face, giving every indication that if I managed to keep from passing out cold on the floor, it would be a real victory.

Pretty soon the plumbing lady came over and asked me if I was alright. "You don't look so good, Mr. Voltaire," she said. "I can't think of how you spell Travis County," I said. "Oh," she said. "Well, maybe you should come back another time when you're feeling better." I breathed on her some more and said, "It's just that these ulcers I get on my leg make it hard to concentrate and I think that must be what's hanging me up now because I started getting a big one last night and it's been draining on me all morning." She looked at my legs and stepped back. On this note the interview pretty well concluded, and I managed to control myself until I got out of the building.

The name I gave to this particular routine was "The Secret Drinker" and the reaction was the last thing that I expected the next few days experimenting and trying out different variations on it. For example, at the offices of Church's Chicken, where I applied for the position of "Manager Trainee" under the name of "Fulton J. Sheen," an honest but invertebrate beer drinker, I had to get up twice to ask the secretary for more paper because it was taking a lot of space to list all of "Fulton J.'s" arrests and hospitalizations. But I hung in there, and the secretary's expression when she finally got a load of this strange and terrible human document was my reward. A day or so later at a northside blueprint firm with an immediate opening for "Civil Draftsman—min. 5 years experience," I showed up with an enormous purple wine stain down my front that was still wet and, having knocked into a couple of chairs on my way up to the receptionist's desk, was quickly told that the civil drafting position had just been filled and they didn't have a call for me. "Well," I said, throwing my weary arms around her neck, "then do you need a civil draftsman?" (I didn't get that job, either.) Another company downtown wanted "Salesman For Manufactured House Goods," and by using the name "Felix Frankfurter," along with a fixed smile and fairly clean clothes, I actually made it past the receptionist and had a short interview with a very pleasant salesman, a Mr. Dil, who was rather spiritless-looking but not unpleasant, and things didn't go badly at first. But there was no way to hide the deep thirst that raged inside me (or inside "Felix") and before long I fell off the subject of manufactured house goods and into a fervid rambling disquisition on my fondness for all sorts of hot mulled rum drinks. Mr. Dil, unable to ignore these conspicuous warning signs, sat through about five minutes of this and then eased me out of his office. "Honey," I told him at the door, "remember to sweeten the rum drink with six tablespoons of honey!" He promised he would.

Hard by, in most of the personnel offices in this country there seems to be at least a tenuous rule in effect prohibiting the staff from attempting to hurt the prospective applicants by physical means. But there is no law against low psychology and many humiliating tricks are employed successfully to make the job hunter feel like a little gob of spit. So it was a heady sensation indeed for me to feel that I was, at least for the moment, turning the tables on this age-old vassalage, and I was coming out of these encounters higher than a kite, already leaping ahead in my mind to the next office and concocting new routines right and left.

"The Shouter," "The Aggrieved Eileptic," "Active T.B. F," "The Lonely Nose-mucker of Avalon," "Frenchman Dear." I had hopes I might try out each and every one of these promising routines before my two week vacation was up, but this was not to be, and as it worked out, I only got to spring "The Shouter" on them. This was at a downtown savings and loan where the Assistant Manager, who resembled Ken (of Ken and Barbie fame) and wore lavender-tinted aviators and white suede loafers with little gold links on them, called me into his office after an interminable wait and interviewed me for the position of "Retail Banking Specialist." I was wearing my best suit and had spruced myself up considerably for this one. Under the name of "Benedict (Dutch) Spinazza," I answered his questions in a nebulous way, making sure that with every sentence I uttered my voice crept up the scale and became louder. Toward the end I was frankly shouting. This alarming and crackbrained increase in volume was accomplished in such gradual stages that I don't think he was ever precisely aware of what was going on or even where we'd left the tracks. I might have kept it up indefinitely until my voice failed or I burst a blood vessel, but the mystified, fidgety, disconsolate look on his face was too much for me and I lost it. Laughing hysterically like a hyena I had to jump up and run out of there fast.

That was when it happened. Outside on the street, my own gales of hilarity distracted me so that I stepped right in the path of an oncoming truck and got clamped. I wound up with a mild concussion and two broken arms. (Editors' Note: The awful implausible gods of mercantile are not lightly mocked.)

And so with a cast on each arm bent at the elbows and crooked out in front of me awkwardly that way for the next couple of months, it was inevitable that my friends should take to calling me "The Crab."
BITTERSWEET

When the ice cream man rang his bells
I ran out into the night to buy a whipcream covered boy who looked the way that I once looked who tasted the way that I once did When I had all my yellow hair when I was a tasty, pretty kid in the Spring dusk, a kid licking dripping red popsicles wapping my fist into the fielder's glove my mother bought for me to gather to my chest a dreamload of summer stars

When the ice cream man rang his bells
I ran out into the night
chasing after his truck come back come back something to me come back tonight, I need a whipcream covered boy who still has all his yellow hair I need to ride the merrygoround in the mirror in the house of dreams at the summer's fair that never went away anywhere but stayed inside of me right here, come back

The ice cream truck stopped & I caught up.
"Whatcha making so much fucking noise about, baldy?" the ice cream man said to me, "I got your mother inside dead on the ice with a popsicle stick shoved up her ass-- wanna lick?" A stick? A stick up my mother's ass? A stick stuck up my dead mother's ass? Yeah, I wanted a lick...

And the ice cream man he made me look and he made me lick at her stuck on the stick in the dusk between the lilac bush and the curly hair of a lost fielder's glove and broken rubbers at dead driveins in the dusk of multiple baseball card collisions & accidental pregnancies of death in the oncoming popsicle melting night where I licked and I licked until bone poked through and a silver cricket perched in the mommy popsicle's pelvic palace hopped out & crashed a penis enlarger across my skull a rather inexpensive penis enlarger, the tinkling shards of glass & rubber crap sounded dull as they fell on the pavement "You can't always get what you want," the silver cricket sang & the broken glass of the twilight fell through night's black house with a bang.

Mike Murphy

I JERRYBILT SALAMANDER

when i saw the babies crawling outside the taproom i knew what a mess i'd made of my life sunset coloured little babies crying for blood more menacing than empty bottles barricaded by crickets in the corner of the graveyard reserved for what comes after the babies sunburnt midnite feast on bald remains of symphonic tissue captured in the middle of my thirsty dewclawed throat

Mike Murphy

DOG BITE

I hold fresh meat out to the clenched chisel-edged teeth because he's a hungry dog and a hungry dog is a hunched jerky-eyed beast fed up with pacing his side of a meatless street.
The flesh pink as a winter geranium passed from hand to forgiving mouth triggers the first bite snapped off smart and clean as the chop of a guillotine.

Francis Poole
Xmas with Murphy

I'm wearing most of the heavier clothes he owns in a sleeping bag wrapped in blanket lying on cold linoleum floor where he keeps a hammer a few inches from his head

Sometimes snoring sounds of a young deer meat being torn from its living bone's by carnivorous teeth. Tiny child whispers soft half dream sounds like an infant might make as maddeningly presses the suffocating pillow Feet wrapped in blanket I have been standing 5 hours turned to the wall a foot and a half away staring into the space heater from which the heat rises at the level of my hot forehead flames

Moonduster ale

wrenched his eyes

1 in those days—no wants making fun of the screen as I did.

S. Gustav Hägglund
a cut of a s eye

it to him

tooth, viciously bony fingers through lipless "stir" voice far off like background music a distant glance steps coming down the hall my finger to my lips frozen

shadows

the shut windows on the carpet a dark stain cancer ward

the ocean in my ear has turned off its siren a gypsum foam gathers rushing to erase the dark alphabets of my knees what dream is so clear it is not utter confusion? a bitter asking wrapped in the burning towel which is the shadow of the body of my soul beneath my fingernails administrators and tax consultants wither turning brown with indefinite demands is it legitimate to ask where is my child? night folds its dense starless carpet over the black grasses where my eyes grow lovers naked and minute lie in the spit of memory worried for the calculations of an unknown metal the Surgeon knows who drowned from spite the Surgeon knows who fixed the door with a cigarette the Surgeon understands the ominous increase of white what room is this full of liquid tubes? all space tilts from the crazy angle of that window emptying legendary planets into a sanitary basket woman's theme is butter breasts and broader hips man's theme is the thin red line that leads to claustrophobia

I pass through the japanese quarter in a dream bus a dread fern proceeds through my left side needles hundreds of miles long plunge slowly through my arms heaven opens its bottle of cerulean ether

I breathe and lose all earthly shape hearing in my other ear the recitation of the desert

Ivan Argüelles

s. gustav hagglund
ELDER LADY

Elder lady was considered addled in wanting to touch all flowers too late at fall. When butterflies emerged graceful from her mouth. No teeth and gums grown gray. But still, bright away of wing.

She'd kiss kids young enough to cringe but not run away. And those who first threw stones, dropped city arms for orange-rimmed insect of brown. Delicate sweeps lifting blueing sky cold and clouds where all would like to fly.

A few before frost sought alleys to ask for press of shrivelled lips and don't tell nobody because I know a flower I best give skin fast. Cause winter'll come and I want some wings to wait.

When freeze dropped blossoms black, lady at last sat to ask. Asked cracked in voice, please my son ... press mouth to mine. Just a slight touch as I dry my last.

Paul Weinman

Q

The 17th of 26 letters in alphabet Is contained in hundreds of words But not in the non-existant calphabet But always in first position never third

Normally used to complete basic fact Generally single with exception as first letter of words Does not compare with a written tract And has no reference to the birds

In one fact only three letters in the word cue It's only second place in a word as squash But regardless it expresses as a cow's moo Only word that rhymes with squash is botch

Many words about two hundred begin with Q Has about as many definitions Is not indicative of what to do Despite these facts there will be no omissions.

Ernest Noyes Brookings

Steve Random
THE CELL

There were clouds in the cuff of my shirt clouds pouring from my cat's eyes I was slapping at squishy grey walls of cloud my teeth were cloudmashing scoffing up meatloaf and catfood clouds I saw clouds in the frozen soup clouds in my lover's ears lying on the TV set I was staring at my fingernails I was thinking of tearing through clouds on a giant knife I'm fumbling with my cloudy shoelace I'm staring through my mother's cataracts I'm up to my dick in clouds I'm trying to suck and eat clouds I'm looking for my pants and finding stone clouds, hammers, glass, steel bars

SPIT FROM THE WHEEL

I was feeling the treads of my tire I was seeing a wheel where the door should be I was chewing a wheel, clutching the wheels in my pocket and scratching the wheel under my hair I was trying to see through wheels of glass I was wiping them, fumbling the loosened spokes and spitting into the straightblowing wind I want to roll on the cleanest wheel in the garage I want to lie on the sacks of sand in the garage I want to smell the dust on the rake in the garage in the garage I want to rub the knives I want to lay my shirt on the pools of oil in the garage I want to break out the windows and count the termites running from the frame I want to fill my shoes with hammers and run on the roof of the garage

SHOE BOILING

I was stuffing a shoe in the bottom of my closet I was placing a shoe on a stool I was holding a baby's shoe next to a shadeless lamp I jabbed a pointy shoe in the ground toe first and stuck my nose in a rubber shoe I looked at my dick and my dick was shod there were shoelaces streaming down my face and I heard a metal shoe ringing in my ears

I saw a river of shoes shoes piled in snags and turning tongue over heel in the boiling water I tied my shoe and stuffed the other with empty socks I started to walk in a circle and saw a caving shoe fly away I lay down on my shoes and was laced with sleep

ABOUT HAMMERS

I was jerking a hammer from the typewriter I was throwing a hammer at the closet I was hammering the TV antenna, dropping a hammer on my footless shoe and walking a hammer into a room I inhabited last week, I was stroking a hammer, feeling affection for the tiny flakes of rust on a hammer with a hammer I was reading a book with a clawless hammer I was casting a vote with a headless hammer I was washing my face I was winding my watch and counting my dollars while a handleless hammer sank to the bottom of a drawer of tools I was hammering on the phone with an insurance man while a hammer flew from the closet and lodged in my shoulder I was eating my hammer on rye and thinking of my final hammer, deep in my pocket, awaiting its box

John M. Bennett
TAKE A LOOK AT THE

ISLAND
of risk and return.”

A Place with first-rate tics

AND THE snapping of cartilage or bone, or the yelp of a

MAINTENANCE Man

who mattered

C. Mehrl Bennett

Well, she had a chair and I had an old dog And my old dog sat on her chair Well, he busted her chair so she sat on the old dog And my old dog turned into a log Well, she had long hair and I had a scissors And my scissors cut off her hair Well, I cut it too short so she ate my scissors And my scissors cut out her gizzards

C. Mehrl Bennett

ONCE THERE WAS

Once there was a car.
Once there was a hole in the road.
Once there was a man.
Once there was a broken leg.
Once there was a rock.
Once there were teeth near the hole.
Once there was a rock near the wheel.

William E. Bennett & John M. Bennett Gray a connect the dots haze in child tear eyes Hard on mayonnaise streaked gray linoleum, the haughty erasure of one sense, shadow stained by amber light Hard in the dark evening blow dry peroxide hard glass future of worms curled in high noon eclipse The dark billboard of the soul Dad says n' thumps his chest, tires sideways on ice & nicotine airways, vitamin deficiency n' insomnia The groaning 500 years straight up in clubs & shades, the candlewax n' brown scratches in the table, the home that was a holiday in 1955, sandblasted clean artifact split for research The data blown confetti in a vaginal explosion high above a peanut butter advertisement with smiling kid It's pressed too hard maybe it's pressed too hard the rose is powdered gray, the light gray floating down on a frozen parade with dead astronaut

Michael Dec

CANDLE EYES

I knew it was a laboratory I saw flames of laser light all around us Shepherds sang my name
I held scalpels and other instruments People were coming down under the frozen stars Through an opening I could see the candle of my eye:
Johnny
Johnny
seemed to be some philanderer looking out of one eye then the other speaking:
Do you enjoy living as one?
Burning as one?
Dying as one alone?
We both flexed our claws Johnny, becoming hollow, threw dust on the glassware

K. S. Ernst & Diana Sherrick
THE GUY

on a snare drum world he has feet like swift brushes hands of a slap shot he spins and he flies dances and comes, a high tech street hacker, a warp 10 dance warrior he's a cool jam in a hot shirt, a hotrod cocked as a corporation flagpole boatrocker static manic-elative
he's a gang on his own-- a laugh electronic with his blasting fast face and his hair in whipped neon, eyes that hit hard and a staple gun mouth, he's a lunatic out on an arcade agenda, he's a date for a burning piano

Jennifer Welch

looking up from the square lawn the square of the factory window squares squearing space to fly through

jwcurry/George Swede Interruptions

(a) the future, conceived to become whole within the egg oviparous full-blown, cracks the shell its parts insertive integrally hung onto the string of time pins & genetics seeds of the present There forever separates from the act that the future comes clean comes whole viviparous in its mother right Here total simultaneous without fanfare or preclusion a future has balls and does not wait to be born seducing goats whose white gums grind eggs comes into the picture unaffixed on its own unannounced her dress in the wind

Edward Kaplan

speech adapted direction bathes in fact dry relapses fur matter matter a particle expands into low flying jwcurry/Mark Laba perhaps there is a large tomato in your cereal if there is a large tomato in your cereal you can be sure perhaps there is not a large tomato in your cereal perhaps no one cares if there is a large tomato in your cereal that would be disappointing indeed indeed

indeed
it was a tiny thing that disturbed me from my sleep a flea indeed a flea
indeed

ZIGWAY

i

I will leave one shoe : a note for you to open -- half as if I were still asleep and each night bring back two by two all the stars except one for you to open unfold, unfold, unfold : laces cloudless across our bed.

Who can lift this shoe carried in tow across those galaxies those eyes now staring at a note that began as eyes -- you too will limp and under each step the darkness turns the cold growing enormous as in dreams where the Earth takes root in your heart and you try one kiss more to wake its sleeping mouth -- I leave half but no words, no blood-stained teeth rickety from fear, from avalanches.

In a sleep that tramples our bed my foot will suddenly thaw.
You will be holding a half.

Simon Perchik

i am i'm other than i'm my mine but i to trouble when i my a you the on the as does the like to do the does my like to do it as on me for under me and above me here time is all but gone and no time this time is here

The Minöy

STOMA 640

the head rained on only so much powder to her cheeks dirt far behind the eye.

Guy R. Beining
I'M COUNTING 7

I want to buy that red dress and you think about the brown-tan dirt you scrape like red fingernails across a Nazi but the piss and vomit are still on statues of Jesus because I'm not in Zürich anymore F. Scott left me there in Kantonsspital in Ohren, Nesen, Hals thinking about Einstein flunked out so I go to the zoo and watch that Secretary bird run with a dead limp baby something in its mouth strutting I think about ears being upside down I go to the bathroom and think about jerking till my ears scream till my nose pouts till my eyes explode blowing circles on the glass just like you said the sun is ringing 8

Hal J. Daniel III

---

Al Ackerman

---

FIVE GOLDEN RINGS
the room is yellow.
the room is bright.
the room is empty.

THE SEA
the sea is sudden the sea is gone

Bob Heman
three from 1983.

1. three wooden walls, a wooden floor,
two chairs and a table, in space.

2. strapped to a stretcher between two approaching seas.

3. good feelings, good feelings, the cellars stocked with racks of blankets.

rod summers jan84.

R. Milinković