
Panelists included (seated left to right) Peter Mansoor, Gen. Raymond E. Mason Jr. Chair in Military History, Richard Herrmann, Social and Behavioral Sciences Distinguished Professor of Political Science, John Mueller, Woody Hayes Chair of National Security Studies, and Fred Andrle, Institute for Collaborative Research and Public Humanities; former WOSU Open Line radio talk show host. Not pictured are panelists Alam Payind, Director of the Middle East Studies Center, and Sean Kay, Professor of Politics and Government and Chair of International Studies at Ohio Wesleyan University.
Fred Andrle, Institute for Collaborative Research and Public Humanities; former WOSU Open Line radio talk show host, and Alam Payind, Director of the Middle East Studies Center, listened as Sean Kay, Professor of Politics and Government and Chair of International Studies at Ohio Wesleyan University, made some remarks during the panel on “America’s Wars: The Way Forward in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Iraq.”

Alam Payind, Director of the Middle East Studies Center, responded to a question posed by Fred Andrle, Institute for Collaborative Research and Public Humanities; former WOSU Open Line radio talk show host, during the panel on “America’s Wars: The Way Forward in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Iraq,” co-sponsored by the Mershon Center for International Security Studies, Institute for Collaborative Research and Public Humanities, and Wexner Center for the Arts.
Panelists listen as Richard Herrmann, Social and Behavioral Sciences Distinguished Professor of Political Science, answers a question posed by moderator Fred Andrle during the panel discussion on “America’s Wars: The Way Forward in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Iraq,” on May 10, 2010. Seated left to right are panelists Peter Mansoor, Gen. Raymond E. Mason Jr. Chair in Military History, Richard Herrmann, Social and Behavioral Sciences Distinguished Professor of Political Science, John Mueller, Woody Hayes Chair of National Security Studies, and Fred Andrle, Institute for Collaborative Research and Public Humanities; former WOSU Open Line radio talk show host. Not pictured are panelists Alam Payind, Director of the Middle East Studies Center, and Sean Kay, Professor of Politics and Government and Chair of International Studies at Ohio Wesleyan University.