Hassan Aly (left), Professor of Economics at The Ohio State University, introduces Gouda Abdel-Khalek, minister of supply and domestic trade in Egypt, and professor of economics at the Faculty of Economics, Cairo University.
Gouda Abdel-Khalek (right) served as minister of solidarity and social justice in the previous Egyptian administration, and was one of the country's major opposition leaders during the Arab Spring revolution.
Among Gouda Abdel-Khalek’s books on Egypt are The Political Economy of Income Distribution in Egypt (Holmes & Meier Publishers, 1982), Stabilization and Adjustment Policies and Programmes: Egypt (WIDER, 1988), and Stabilization and Adjustment in Egypt: Reform or De-Industrialization (Edward Elgar, 2001).
After his talk, Gouda Abdel-Khalek (left) spoke with John Mueller (center), Woody Hayes Chair of National Security Studies, and Alam Payind, director of the Middle East Studies Center.
Hassan Aly (center), Professor of Economics at The Ohio State University, stands with Gouda Abdel-Khalek (left), minister of supply and domestic trade in Egypt, and Karima Korayem, Professor of Economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt. Aly organized their visit to the Mershon Center.
Organizers and speakers for the Egypt and the Arab Spring Revolution symposium included (left to right) Melinda McClimens, Middle East Studies Center; Carter Findley, Humanities Distinguished Professor of History; Alam Payind, director of the Middle East Studies Center; Gouda Abdel-Khalek, minister of supply and domestic trade in Egypt; Karima Korayem, Professor of Economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt; Hassan Aly, Professor of Economics at Ohio State; and Katherine Meyer, Professor of Sociology at Ohio State.
About 75 people turned out to hear about "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" on January 9, 2012, at the Barrister Club
"The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" included a talk by Karima Korayem, Professor of Economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt, with discussion by Gouda Abdel-Khalek, Minister of Supply and Domestic Trade in Egypt, and Hassan Aly, Professor of Economics at Ohio State.
Hassan Aly responds to Karima Korayem's address on "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt."
Gouda Abdel-Khalek, Minister of Supply and Domestic Trade in Egypt, responds to Karima Korayem’s address on “The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt.”
Carter Findley (standing), Humanities Distinguished Professor of History, asks a question of the panel at "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt," held January 9, 2012 at the Barrister Club.
Karima Korayem (right), Professor of Economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt, discusses "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" on January 9, 2012, at the Barrister Club.
Attendees talk with Gouda Abdel-Khalek, Minister of Supply and Domestic Trade in Egypt, during a reception at "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" symposium, held January 9, 2012, at the Barrister Club.
Attendees talk with Karima Korayem, Professor of Economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt, during a reception at "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" symposium, held January 9, 2012, at the Barrister Club.
Attendees gather during the reception at "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" symposium held January 9, 2012, at the Barrister Club.
Attendees gather during the reception at "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" symposium held January 9, 2012, at the Barrister Club.
Participants at "The Challenges of the Arab Spring Revolution in Egypt" symposium included (left to right) Hassan Aly, professor of economics at Ohio State; Gouda Abdel-Khalek, minister of supply and domestic trade in Egypt; and Karima Korayem, professor of economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt.
Karima Korayem, professor of economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt, leads a roundtable in the Women of Color Conversation Series, organized by The Women's Place on January 10, 2012. (Photo by Diane Florian, The Women's Place)
Karima Korayem, professor of economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt, leads a roundtable in the Women of Color Conversation Series, organized by The Women's Place on January 10, 2012. (Photo by Diane Florian, The Women's Place)
Karima Korayem (left), professor of economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt, speaks as Hazel Morrow-Jones, director of The Women's Place, listens during the Women of Color Conversation Series held January 10, 2012. (Photo by Diane Florian, The Women's Place)
Karima Korayem (center), professor of economics at Al-Azhar University in Egypt, speaks during the Women of Color Conversation on Series held January 10, 2012. (Photo by Diane Florian, The Women's Place)