
The purpose of this bibliography is to list the published writings of Sir Humphry Davy that appeared both during his lifetime and posthumously. The list includes translations of his papers, reports of his experimental findings printed prior to the official version, and critical reviews in journals not exclusively devoted to scientific projects.

The author describes such intimate items as Davy's writing habits and the general physical character of many of his manuscripts. A list of the major biographies of Davy is also included.

This publication is a very comprehensive, worthwhile collection both of information about Sir Humphry Davy and of his published works for the scholar who needs this type of information about a man who for a time was a leading member of the international scientific community.
