Richard Immerman visited as part of the Mershon Center's Diplomatic History Speaker Series.
During the initial Cold War years, a confluence of bureaucratic politics, individual initiatives, and strategic preferences rapidly and radically transformed the CIA’s identity from an agency established to collect and analyze intelligence to one preoccupied with covert and paramilitary operations, Richard Immerman argues.
Richard Immerman (center) spoke with several attendees after his event, including Mershon affiliates John Mueller (center left) and Dakota Rudesill (second from right).