

About 100 people attended the panel discussion Waging Peace on September 9, 2014, at Saxbe Auditorium, Moritz College of Law, co-sponsored by the Humanities Institute and Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Panelists for Waging Peace included (left to right) Fred Andrie, former host of Open Line on WOSU and Humanities Institute associate; Katherine Borland, director of the Center for Folklore Studies; John Carlarne, peace studies coordinator; Christopher Gelpi, Chair of Peace Studies and Conflict Resolution; and Craig Jenkins, director of the Mershon Center.

John Carlarne, peace studies coordinator, answered a question as Christopher Gelpi, Chair of Peace Studies, and Craig Jenkins, director of the Mershon Center, listened.

Fred Andrie and Katherine Borland listened during the Waging Peace panel discussion.

The Waging Peace panel examined the impact of democracy, human rights, and trade on international peace-building, explored the impact of U.N. peacekeeping, and talked about grassroots peace and anti-intervention movements, exploring the intersections of activism and peace.

Audience members interacted with panelists after the Waging Peace event.

Waging Peace panelists included (left to right) Fred Andrie, former host of Open Line on WOSU and Humanities Institute associate; Katherine Borland, director of the Center for Folklore Studies; John Carlane, peace studies coordinator; Christopher Gelpi, Chair of Peace Studies and Conflict Resolution; and Craig Jenkins, director of the Mershon Center.