Sara Mitchell, professor of political science and department chair at the University of Iowa, speaks on "Cross Border Troubles? Interstate River Conflicts and Intrastate Violence" on January 21, 2015, at the Mershon Center.
Sara Mitchell is co-director of the Issue Correlates of War Project (http://www.paulhensel.org/icow.html) and an associate editor of Foreign Policy Analysis and Research & Politics.
Mitchell examines the relationship between interstate river conflicts and intrastate violence such as riots, strikes, demonstrations, and civil wars in the Western Hemisphere, Western Europe, and the Middle East. She finds that states that experience more interstate conflicts over shared river basins are at a higher risk for multiple forms of intrastate conflict, raising the risk of internal conflict by as much as 800 percent.
