Sara Kreps, associate professor of government at Cornell University, spoke on "Mechanisms of Morality: Why the U.S. Public Supports Humanitarian Interventions" on April 15, 2015, at the Mershon Center.
Sara Kreps investigates public attitudes towards humanitarian intervention, first whether support is higher than alternative uses of force, and second how much the humanitarian aspect of these interventions matter relative to other characteristics such as multilateralism and strategic interests.
Mershon affiliate Jeremy Wallace (left), associate professor of political science, stands with Sara Kreps and Randy Schweller (center), professor of political science, who organized the event.