INTRODUCTION

A shade tree evaluation planting was begun at the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center in Wooster, Ohio, in 1965. This shade tree evaluation effort was a cooperative venture between the Research Center, Ohio Electric Utilities Institute, Ohio Nurserymen's Association, Ohio Chapter of the International Society of Arboriculture, and the Secrest Arboretum. The trees established in the planting were selected for their potential as street trees for cities and towns in Ohio.

Trees were, in part, selected for different potential heights in an attempt to identify trees which could be grown under power lines without requiring significant amounts of pruning. It was realized then that millions of dollars per year could be saved in Ohio alone by selecting the proper trees for specific locations in cities. In order to make appropriate tree recommendations, however, an objective evaluation of the trees is necessary.

Trees have been evaluated yearly for growth rate, habit of growth, insect and disease susceptibility, and environmental problems which might affect their usefulness for city use. To date, more than 1100 trees of 150 types have been evaluated or are being evaluated. Trees are evaluated twice yearly by a panel of seven horticulturists, landscape designers, arborists, urban foresters, and utility arborists for suitability as street trees. Although the trees are not growing under city conditions, cultural practices used are similar to those used in the city. Pruning, fertilizing, and spraying have been kept to a minimum. Trees are allowed to assume a natural shape in order to allow the evaluators to make reasonable judgments as to a plant's suitability.

Several publications reporting the results of tree evaluations have been published during the course of the project. Timely news releases have been circulated to publicize the information obtained from the study and to assist interested persons in tree selection.

A commonly asked question regarding specific desirable trees is, "Where can I buy it?". To provide the needed consumer assistance, this source book has been prepared. The source book lists all of the trees currently in Ohio's Shade Tree Evaluation Project plus all of the trees which have been evaluated previously. The Wholesale Nursery Growers of America and the Ohio Nurserymen's Association supplied their membership lists at no cost. Nursery stock questionnaires were sent to the members of these organizations. Some 270 of the 800 questionnaires were returned. The nurserymen listed the plants as being available, whether they were 3' tall or 30' tall. A check with the various nurseries will provide up-to-date information on what sizes are available.

Source books are indispensable aids to anyone seriously interested in trees. Use of this source book will enable landscape architects, landscape designers, nurserymen, extension agents, urban foresters, horticulturists, educators, city officials, highway officials, and home owners to readily determine where a large percentage of deciduous shade trees grown in the U. S. can be obtained. In recognition of the value of such a reference, the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Forest Service, State and Private Forestry, has generously assisted with the publication costs.

1The financial support of the O. E. I. U. during the early years of the study is gratefully acknowledged.
The trees are listed alphabetically by scientific name. Under each scientific name, the common name is given. A cross reference listing common and scientific names of all of the trees is included. Nurseries are listed by name under the plants they offer for sale. Firms are listed alphabetically by state and alphabetically by nursery name under their state. Once a person obtains a list of nurseries which carry a plant wanted, a check in the last section of the book will provide addresses and phone numbers of all nurseries listed in the source list. A code indicates whether the nursery sells wholesale (W), retail (R), or mail order (M). Home owners will find it simple to obtain the plants they want from wholesale nurseries by contacting their local garden store and informing them of where the plant they want can be located.
The list is alphabetized by common name in the left hand column. The correct scientific name is opposite the common name and must be used in order to find the material in the listing of trees.

NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF PARTICIPATING NURSERIES

Nurseries in this section are listed alphabetically by state and then alphabetically within the state where their headquarters are located. Phone numbers are also given when they were provided by the nursery. In a few instances, two branches of the same nursery with slightly different offerings responded to the survey and both branches are listed. Sometimes only the phone numbers are different.

There are undoubtedly other nurseries which propagate one or more of the trees listed but they were either missed by the survey or failed to respond. The inclusion or exclusion of a nursery is not intended as a recommendation.
