Eight years’ dust I brush away, dead cells, dander, bug decay, oiling hinges down the line, helping frozen keys unbind, resurrecting dry black ink, letters, numbers needing drink, cooing like a doting mother, how I love my little Brother!
Broken Portal

I would not change.
The dying, the living, leaves on trees,
Life carried on without me.
Clinging to you, while transcending space and time…

The dying, the living, leaves on trees
Coming to, and being shocked by the whole of it.
Clinging to you, while transcending space and time…
But going nowhere.

Coming to, and being shocked by the whole of it,
When you walked out the door, I locked it.
But, going nowhere,
You weren’t the same anyway.

You walked out the door, and I locked it.
But I still would not change.
And you weren’t the same, anyway.
Life carries on without me.
Nice to See You Again

How long has it been? About 2,763 days…
But who’s counting? Am I still banned, From the time you made a point to seize My will, and on my finger put a ring,
Then ran, and left me as prey
For broken halos on winged feet?

For to woo me was no simple feat!
When I think about those carefree days–
Then, I never turned my head to God to pray– Always laughing, playing with a band…
And I never let my hands wring, Knowing there were so many fish in the seas.

Wrapping my mind around what my heart sees,
And so, swept swiftly off my feet,
Crashing, searing, a flaming ring, Ablaze! For five fiery days…
You introduced me to the band,
And you led me to your place to pray.
You lost me there, and turned your head to God to pray—
In the dusk, in the dust in the juniper trees, Coming back, to find a bond and future leaving banned.
To keep such a vow would be no easy feat,
For someone like me—my life, in a daze,
Upon me a spell, on my finger a ring.

And when suddenly you were gone, my hands did wring,
And my head did turn to God and pray.
I would count the tears and heartbeats and days…
Willing you to come from across the seas
With happy eyes and dancing feet,
The leader of my band.

Eyelashes flutter, soul window’s shuttered with permanence… banned.
But as sure as the blanket shrouds the hands you wring—
It isn’t long enough to cover the shuffle of nervous feet.
In a crowd of wolves, he left you as prey—
But this moment to pounce, I fail to seize And save for the next life’s rainy days.
Five happy days steeping in eternity since I was banned.

Across nine years and seven seas I hear your voice still ring,

Turn my head to God to pray, keep wringing hands and feet.

Pockets stuffed with empty packs,

Empty bottle, paper sacks,

Fliers from a solo show,

Small rock chips in the window,

Clods from footsteps, flowers, fake,

A 5-in-1 and Linda’s rake,

Dried blooms, a bed for Red Tail’s wing,

Far brighter than they were in Spring

Limericks are wonderful Until they’re torn asunder-ful
As long as they’re funny,
Or clever or punny,
Who cares if they’re blunder-ful?
An At-Risk Youth Comes of Age

She came on board in saddle shoes
An at-risk youth with at-risk blues
From schoolyard games she’d left behind For hypodermic peace of mind
Her crayon colors, long forgotten
She traded in for Oxycontin
And sailed away hoping to score
But shipwrecked on an empty shore
I took a day trip to Memory Lane
Memory Lane
is always the same a six-pack of sisters playing mind games socking each other and shuffling blame
red hot anger flames fanning fires
with me in the middle just like old times trapped between lunatics vibrating with deep-seated fear and the adrenaline rush of a rabid sibling rivalry.
We went pedal to metal on Memory Lane, and Memory Lane is always the same,
And it was just like old times.
From terror to envy in 5 seconds flat, eating up highway,
that wood-paneled land yacht,
with death threats from Dad and Mom retching straight out the window.
Running on empty on Memory Lane,
Memory Lane
will not be the same At first they were nine,
and then they were eight,
left in a waking nightmare and the aftermath of shattered illusions
about miraculous survival, death had its way
and Memory lane
has fallen to shame, with no one left except those silently wishing to be next
Mixed Emotions at a Graveside

Now we lay you down to sleep, We pray the Lord your soul to keep
But I think we all know that isn’t likely to happen.

Part of me, detached and free,
Hovers above this spectacle
And watches me carry the flag.
The one I wrote about,
Spoke out about,
When I was young
And in front of City Council
And God and everybody.
Except for you,
Who I hadn’t seen in years.

And this flag,
Perfect little triangle that it is,
Is still trite, all the same,
And at best a momento
From someone else’s more honorable deeds.
But not yours.

Here, at this military service,
Puny and insignificant next to my brother,
The real soldier,
Feeling like a hypocrite
And wondering if anyone else even Remembers that speech.
Or, that I got kicked out of the military.

Here, where Father What’s-His-Name Seems more moved than anyone
By his own service
For this old man, dead man, bad man,
A pile of benign ashes That shouldn’t be able to Hurt anyone anymore,
But still does.
And part of me stops
The rest from sobbing
To wonder if he’s the same priest Who came to counsel all those times
You tried to kill Mom
Or she tried to kill you Or you both tried to kill your children,
And then he did nothing But bow his head to Shield his eyes from the Horrors before him.

And I think he’s a hypocrite.
And I think you were a hypocrite, too.
So I raise my head
And mouth the words to a prayer
I always thought was bullshit,
Even in baby teeth.
I say “Rest in Peace,” While I’m thinking
“Rot in Hell,”
And take one last Look around at the mourners.
Your mourners—More than I expected and More than we all secretly think you deserve.
After the Manifesto

America just grabbed her own pussy
but has the nerve to cry out in protest America I’ve been living paycheck to paycheck since I was seven but now I’m unemployable and $52,368 in debt. you do the math
America, I overthink everything to the point of exhaustion and yet
I come to no conclusions,
and,
you’re poisoning everyone and making it almost impossible to be part of the solution

Your churches are full of hypocrites who buy absolution on the cheap and burn rubber out of the parking lot in shiny death machines to spend the rest of the day ignoring their families.

We’re counting down the final seconds and--

UNBELIEVABLE!

LET’S SEE THAT IN AN INSTANT REPLAY!

America, let's not.

Pre-game, post-game,

halftime tantrums,

highlights and

screaming at a deaf TV

No, I did not see that play,

and,

America,

I have not seen the fucking remote.

America, your feminist Nazi principles are chewing the balls off some of your best men and asking for seconds, and sometimes your fight for equality looks a lot like revenge.

Or fascism.

Your last President won the Nobel Peace Prize and then he bombed the shit out of practically everyone for two terms straight and, America, you know what you did.

"Ashes Found in Statue’s Lap after Woman Self-Immolates at the Lincoln Memorial in Protest" Hey, America--
Sometimes you make me want to set myself on fire too.
I signed away my life for you and in return you told me I was a narcissist and then locked me up in a mental hospital.
America, you know you’ve won when there are no protests on college campuses when no one cares less than late model kids in late model cars
God is dead and Ginsberg is dead and all the best minds are lobotomized and there is no one left to howl and no one around to hear them when all that’s left lies discarded and crumpled in a heap on the floor.
An echo in an empty room,
a full ashtray and an empty glass, whitish crescents ripped and spitted, dried drops of blood from the last resistance, furious scrawlings on the walls and in notebooks enroute to nowhere and all those other remnants that crazed minds leave behind are all that ever remains

The Nights I Drank Too Much, Too Fast

When we went to Cedar Point
I lost it on a ride,
And then I lost it during lunch,
And tried my best to hide,
One time I chugged a lot of beer,
Two hours before noon,
One time I barfed inside your car,
At Burning Man, in June.
Some nights I drank too much, too fast,
And boy, my head was spinning!
One time I ate a bad hot dog,
Before the seventh inning.
And once I mixed a bunch of meds,
Just made it to the door,
Then lost it on the sidewalk,
Wiped my mouth, and ordered more.

And then there was this one time I drank 9 Vanilla Stoli Smith & Wessons at a company Christmas party on an empty stomach and then blacked out on 5th Avenue and woke up in a clawfoot tub covered in vomit and something that vaguely resembled julienned carrots that no one could explain, and nothing could be done about the smell left in the hallway carpet and we almost got evicted…
That time I thought “NEVER AGAIN!”

For years I was afflicted!

Admittedly, I drank too much,

But oh, how far I’ve come-

I look back now and wonder how

I’m left with any stom-ach!
THANK YOU

A Graduating Student’s Lament of a Heavily Flawed Public Education System and also the Looming Mountain of Recently-Acquired Financial Obligations
Necessary to Reverse the Perverse Teachings of Said System (or Countdown to Forbearance)

For thirteen years I swallowed lies, While never feeling full.
Thirteen years of crap for free-- A gratis load of bull!

Then I began this journey called “The Path of Higher Learning.”
I came to quench the thirst for truth
That kept my conscience yearning,

And found some truth between the lines, (With help and on my own),
But not without acquiring A heap of student loans!

And as I leave these hallowed halls,
So soon to be deported,
I start to get the feeling that I’ve somehow been extorted.
I’m thankful for the things I’ve learned,
The truth I now can see,
But is it worth this crushing debt
To have what should be free?
Burying the Past

One late Summer day
We laid you to rest
Cigarette ashes
Mixed with asbestos
And all your kids raised
Their glass for a toast
To honor the asshole
They should hate the most
And pray to the Lord
Your soul for to save
And bury the past
In a freshly packed grave
But I think I speak
For the bulk of the lot
When I say I’ve got plans
To piss on the plot!
Yet to Come

Have you heard the news today?
They say that freedom’s giving way,
And the worst is yet to come, I fear
The worst is yet to come.
What’s the point of history,
If it’s lessons don’t apply to me?
The worst is yet to come, my friend,
The worst is yet to come.
Privacy has been repealed, There’re big ears in your cornfield, and The worst is yet to come, I bet,
The worst is yet to come.
Lack of foresight brings remorse-- Don’t believe me, ask a Norse!
And the worst is yet to come, I know,
The worst is yet to come.
Have you heard the latest word?
Dying bees and falling birds,
“The worst is yet to come,” they sang,
“The worst is yet to come!”
Ones that used to flutter by Have vanished with the butterflies.
The worst is yet to come, I swear,
The worst is yet to come.
So all you history-phobic yeomen, Take some pointers from a Roman, who’ll say,
“The worst is yet to come, old boy,”
The worst is yet to come.”
Hubris, peaking, tends to be The downfall of society!
And the worst is yet to come, oh yes!
The worst is yet to come.
History will be repeated,
Even if, this time, it’s Tweeted,
#TheWorstIsYetToCome--you’ll see!
