

Editor's Note

I am grateful to those members of the Medieval Association of the Midwest recognized in the "Foreword," who served both as advisors and as readers for this volume; to the contributors, both those whose work is represented herein and those whose worthy efforts fell prey to space limitations; to the Emporia State University Department of English for its financial and practical support; to Cori Heskett, the student secretary who was largely responsible for the preliminary keyboarding; and to Peggy Anderson, the English Department secretary who, to steal a phrase from my predecessor, John McCully, has in truth served as co-editor of this volume.

Mel Storm
Department of English
Emporia State University