

Shinobu Kitayama, professor of psychology and director of the Culture and Cognition Program at the University of Michigan, gave a lecture at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies titled "Ethos of Independence Across Regions in the United States: The Production-Adoption Model of Cultural Change."

Shinobu Kitayama, professor of psychology and director of the Culture and Cognition Program at the University of Michigan, fielded questions from a capacity audience following his lecture titled "Ethos of Independence Across Regions in the United States: The Production-Adoption Model of Cultural Change," which he delivered at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies on May 24, 2010.

Shinobu Kitayama, professor of psychology and director of the Culture and Cognition Program at the University of Michigan, fielded questions from a capacity audience following his lecture titled "Ethos of Independence Across Regions in the United States: The Production-Adoption Model of Cultural Change," which he delivered at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies on May 24, 2010.