ROY D. BECK

From time to time we have given sketches of prominent engineering students, along with their activities; this time a new policy was necessary, because the entire allotted space would be taken up with the mere listing of Beck's activities. The list was recently completed when he won his letter on the rifle team, and besides that his watch chain is burdened with numerous keys, including Tau Beta Pi and Scarlet Mask. Roy is now writing the last line to a college career which stands out for its extreme diversity, and if college training means anything, he ought to be well prepared for his career, for there are few opportunities that he has missed. Roy is a member of Delta Chi fraternity.

JAMES ANDERSON

Jim Anderson is remarkable. Most of us have planned our work so that our senior year will be one of study, and nothing but study. Anderson has studied too, but besides that he has crowded into the year enough of other school interests to keep even a Commerce and Journalism student busy. "Committees for action should be small," is an excellent parliamentary axiom, and it was quite well indeed that the responsibility of planning Engineers' Day was placed in the hands of Jim Anderson. He is a member of Engineers' Council and Theta Tau fraternity.
