Overview

Immigration: What's at Stake? is the first major interdisciplinary conference of the Immigration COMPAS, organized with the support of the Mershon Center for International Security Studies, that will focus on core ethical, political, social, and economic issues related to immigration. The conference will bring together a truly distinguished set of researchers addressing the main challenges and opportunities immigration poses in the modern world.

Don Hubin

Professor and Department
Chair
Department of Philosophy
The Ohio State
University

Eric MacGilvray
Assistant Professor
Political Science
University

The conference aims to interest not only researchers and students, but the broader community. Beside the academic panels, there will be two panels specifically oriented to public discussion. The introductory panel will focus on broad demographic changes on international, national, and local levels, including discussion of how immigration has affected Ohio. The final session will be a question and answer moderated by Fred Andrlé (WOSU), encouraging reflective engagement by the community.
